C. of C. Hits Securities Act As Drawback To Recovery

'Reasonable' Mart Control Approved

Parley Refrains From Passing Judgment on NRA.

By Felix Bruner.

Resolutions adopted at the closing session of the United States Chamber of Commerce yesterday criticized some features of the recovery program and some Federal legislation, actual and proposed, but in none of them was there even an echo of a cry of "wolf."

The resolutions refrained from passing judgment on the NRA. It merely declared in reference to the Blue Eagle that nothing should be allowed to minimize the importance of trade associations in the administration of codes.

The convention perfunctorily voted to adopt the report of the resolutions committee. Incidentally, the report was prepared in its final form before President Roosevelt in a message to the delegates warned business to cooperate with the New Deal and not cry "wolf."

The resolutions were far milder in tone than most of the speeches heard on the convention floor. They covered nearly every phase of the recovery program, which was taken for a figurative "ride."

Before adjournment the delegates reelected President Henry I. Harriman, who was in at the inception of the NRA program and who continues to support most of its features.

Securities Act Assailed.

One of the most pronounced stands taken by the convention was in opposition to some of the features of the securities act of 1933.

"The securities act of 1933 is so restrictive as to make practically impossible much financing that is necessary for economic recovery and for the orderly conduct of business enterprises of high integrity, while laying at the same time a heavy burden of expense and delay upon the issuance of permissible securities," the resolution said.

"Congress should adopt as soon as possible in the present session amendments to the act which will overcome its effects in retarding the legitimate transactions in securities necessary to provide for

N.Y. Policeman Slain by Bandits

Baby Among 6 Others Hurt in Two Shootings During Day.

New York, May 4 (U.P.).—A New York policeman was shot to death and three bystanders, including a baby, were wounded late today by gunmen during a hold-up of a downtown restaurant.

Patrolman Arthur Rasmussen, who made a single-handed attempt to halt the robbery, was wounded fatally by four bandits, who fled in an automobile.

The shooting brought the day's gunmen casualities in New York City to seven. Two policemen and a bystander were wounded seriously this morning by two arsonists who, trapped in a Harlem hallway, shot their way to freedom.

One of the officers shot down in the earlier affray, a patrolman, just returned from his honeymoon—is not expected to recover.

Police officials, enraged by the second attack on officers in 15 hours, bottled up Manhattan Island by ordering a heavy guard at every ferry terminal, bridgehead and tunnel.

Every available radio car was mobilized and a virtual barricade was established in an attempt to nab the gunmen.

698 Bank Openings Listed Since Jan. 1

New York, May 4 (A.P.).—There have been 698 bank openings since the first of the year, according to The American Banker. Reopened or replaced were 235 National and 463 State banks.

Openings during April passed the 200 mark and for the past week numbered 29, the publication reports.

4 Killed, 4 Injured As Ship Is Grounded

Raging Seas Smash Lifeboats Off Mouth of Columbia; Frantic Radio Appeal Brings Cutter to Scene and Stricken Vessel Is Saved.

Astoria, Oreg., May 4 (A.P.).—Four seamen lost their lives and four others were injured when the Norwegian motorship Childar grounded on Peacock Spit, north of the Columbia River's mouth, today.

The announcement was made by J. J. Moore & Co., agents. The line operates in the Pacific Coast-South African service.

Those who died were First Officer Christenson, Second Officer B. Jonness, Steward Jacobsen, washed overboard, and Cook Melvil, killed aboard.

The vessel was being towed back to Astoria late today by the Coast Guard cutter Red Wing.

The motorship grounded as she moved out from Columbia River ports for Cape Town with a cargo of lumber. She carried Capt. Mathiasen and a crew of 28.

The Childar lost four lifeboats, swamped when the crew attempted to lower them into the raging sea.

At one time she floated free but the crew was unable to anchor her, and she grounded again. The cutter Red Wing rushed to the scene and got a line aboard in answer to a radio S O S.

The storm which caused the accident swept numerous fishing boats out to sea and the Coast Guard was busy rescuing these boats.

U. S. Begins Building Up Air Defense

$50,000,000 to Be Used to Purchase 1,000 New Planes.

By Frank Getty.

The long-awaited aviation program to put the United States Army Air Corps on a par with those of other leading nations—a program involving the expenditure of $50,000,000 for 1,000 new airplanes in the next three years—was announced yesterday by the War Department.

The first step will be the advertising of bids next Monday for 80 bombers and 30 attack planes, to be purchased with $7,500,000 of Public Works Administration funds.

Before July 1, Maj. Gen. Benjamin D. Foulois will invite airplane manufacturers to bid on from 300 to 400 additional planes of all types, to be bought with Congressional appropriations for the ensuing fiscal year.

The War Department, within a month or so, also will announce specifications for bids on planes to be delivered in 1936. These bids will not be opened until next spring.

Contracts Opposed.

Assistant Secretary of War Woodring, whose office is charged with procurement of the new aircraft to bring the Army Air Corps up to standards set by foreign nations, has been constantly in touch with the House military affairs subcommittee on aviation during the past fortnight. It was at the request of this committee that awards of contracts for the planes to be purchased with $7,500,000 in PWA funds were held up last February.

The commitee, of which Representative Rogers (Democrat), New Hampshire, is chairman, handed down a report objecting strongly to the system of negotiated contracts under which Army plane purchases were made in the past. The Judge Advocate General also ruled that specifications on the proposed PWA purchase had been drawn illegally.

After extensive hearings, the committee has given its approval to the manner in which the 110 new planes are to be purchased through open, competitive bidding among all manufacturers capable of meeting the specifications.

Meanwhile, commercial carriers were rushing plans to take over

Marlboro Man Fined $111 for Gambling

Marking the first conviction since the beginning of a county-wide protest against the grand jury's suggestion that gambling be made legal, Judge Waldo Burnside, of the Marlboro Police Court, yesterday fined Thomas E. Wilson $111 for permitting gambling and possession of liquor.

Wilson, who operates an establishment in Marlboro, one block from the Prince Georges County police station, was alleged to have operated a gambling table, sold liquor without tax and permitting untaxed liquor on his premises.

Walsh Asks Pay Violation Prosecutions

Senators Told Contractors Force "Kick Backs" on Government Jobs.

Criminal prosecution of contractors who have violated the Bacon-Davis prevailing wage law by compelling employes to "kick back" a part of their ostensible wages, cancellation of Government contracts where contractors have violated the law, and dismissal of Government officials who have permitted violations to go unchecked, were urged yesterday by Senator David I. Walsh (Democrat), Massachusetts, chairman of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor.

Senator Walsh's statement followed a public hearing before the committee, at which representatives of labor organizations charged widespread violations of the prevailing wage law and urged approval of the resolution calling for a Nation-wide investigation of working conditions and pay on Government building projects.

The resolution was introduced jointly by Senator James J. Davis (Republican), of Pennsylvania, co-author of the prevailing wage law, and Senator Walsh.

Investigation Sought.

Adoption of the resolution will be recommended to the Senate by his committee, Senator Walsh predicted. Funds for carrying on the investigation, however, must come from the Senate Committee on Audit and Control of Contingent Expenses, of which Senator James F. Byrnes (Democrat), South Carolina, is chairman. Proponents of the investigation are said to have met with a cold reception there.

An executive meeting of the Labor Committee to consider the subject is planned before the public hearings are resumed at 10 a. m., Monday, the chairman said.

Additional legislation governing Government construction projects throughout the country as well as in the National Capital may be prepared as a result of information he expects the investigation to develop, Senator Walsh said. Representatives of the "decent element" among contractors, who have fought against payment of depression wages to em-

Mayflower Reorganization Inquiry Is Asked of Senate

Senate investigation of the sale of Mayflower Hotel securities and other financial operations revolving about the hotel property is provided for in a resolution introduced in the Senate yesterday by Senator Ernest W. Gibson (Republican), Vermont.

The investigation would be made by the Senate District Committee, which would submit a report to the Senate not later than May 31 under terms of the resolution. Aid of the District Commissioners and corporation counsel would be given the committee.

Holders of $2,400,000 second mortgage 6½ per cent bonds, $3,031,100 worth of 6 per cent preferred stock and 60,000 shares of common stock would be frozen out under the financial reorganization plan which has been approved after a long fight in the District courts, the resolution said. Under the court authorization the property may be sold at not less than $2,800,000 for the protection of holders of first mortgage bonds, it was said.

Two of three bondholders' committees which are pushing the foreclosure proceeding, the resolution said, are composed of the original sellers of the $12,931,000 securities against the property, or the associates or affiliates of the sellers. S. W. Strauss & Co. floated many of the securities.

The investigation would show who sold the securities and the methods employed, history of the management of the property, circumstances surrounding the fixing of the $2,800,000 foreclosure figure, and whether the original sellers are the same as those who now are in control of the bondholders' committees.

The purpose of the inquiry, the resolution said, is to provide the Senate with information which would prevent similar financial operations in the future.

Japan Rules Asia Alone, World Told

Western Powers Will Not Be Consulted Again, Says Hirota.

Policy Toward Far East Reiterated in Stronger Statement.

Tokyo, May 4 (A.P.).—A new and stronger statement of Japan's "Asia for Asiatics" policy came today from Foreign Minister Koki Hirota, who intimated emphatically that never again will his nation discuss Far Eastern problems with Western powers.

"We shall not repeat what happened at Geneva," Hirota declared in an address to prefectural governors, referring to the break with the League of Nations over Japanese activities in Manchuria.

"We have no objection whatever to exchanging views, if necessary, with each individual power regarding treaty rights and interests," he explained, and added:

"But, in view of the fact that on questions of East Asia our views were rejected by the powers at the Geneva meeting of the League of Nations which forced our decision to withdraw from the league, it would surely be unwise to reproduce a situation such as we encountered at Geneva."

Insists on Protector Role.

While only the Geneva incident was mentioned, observers considered the minister was implying that Japan never again will debate Oriental questions on equal terms with Western nations, as she did in 1922 when the nine-power treaty was framed.

"Japan is the principal protector of the stability and the peace of Eastern Asia," Hirota insisted.

"It is Japan's mission to maintain peace and order in Eastern Asia in cooperation with other countries of the Far East.

"Japan sincerely desires the unification, integrity and prosperity of China, which can be attained only through China's own self-awakening efforts."

The speech followed the general line of statements of China's policy which started April 17 with a foreign office spokesman's declaration that Japan holds to a "Hands-off-China" policy toward the Occident.

As in his official reply to the British and American ambassadors, who asked an explanation of the spokesman's statement, Hirota reiterated that Japan respects existing treaties and the rights of other powers in China.

Expects Difficulties.

These treaties include the nine-power pact with its assurances of equal opportunity and the open door.

"So-called assistance given to China by outside parties with selfish motives," Hirota declared, however, only hampers China's progress toward unification and prosperity.

"Japan," he declared, "can not remain silent when a third party disturbs relations between Japan and China or takes action disturbing the peace of east Asia.

"Anti-Japanese movements in China must be stopped. Recently the Chinese have shown an inclination to understand Japan's true motives, paving the way to a genuine understanding between the two countries."

The speech was limited to general statements of principles, no specific instance of allegedly improper aid to China being cited.

"In view of the radical changes the world is undergoing," Hirota said, "I believe we shall encounter not a few difficulties in the future, although our path at present is rather uneventful."

German Exchange Cut Precedes Import Drop

Berlin, May 4 (A.P.).—Further limitation of German imports was indicated today by an official announcement that the foreign exchange quota will be 25 per cent in May instead of 35 per cent as in April.

Commercial acceptances can be utilized for credit only up to 50 per cent, compared with 70 per cent in April.

Security Act Damage Suit Curb Asked

Limiting to Actual Loss Suffered Is Urged by Fletcher.

Proposal Is Regarded as Most Important of Several Changes.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Restriction of the damages collectible in a suit under the 1933 securities act to the actual loss suffered by reason of reliance on an untrue or misleading statement was proposed yesterday by Senator Duncan U. Fletcher (Democrat), Florida.

This was regarded as the most important of a series of amendments proposed by the elderly Banking and Currency Committee chairman to the hotly controverted securities act passed May a year ago. While several of these amendments were devoted to clarification of language in the law, others were heralded by Administration spokesmen as substantially liberalizing that measure.

Senator Fletcher introduced his proposed securities act amendments in the Senate as a rider to the stock market regulation bill passed yesterday by the House. This measure will be taken up in the Senate next week, it is expected. Among the Fletcher proposals was one transferring administration of the securities act to the proposed Federal Securities Exchange Commission.

Landis Headed Drafting.

Regarded as the Administration spokesman in the upper chamber of Congress on banking and securities questions, Senator Fletcher's proposed amendments were in the first instance drafted by James M. Landis, Federal Trade Commissioner, and others associated with him in the Administration.

Their draft of the amendments to the securities act, however, was revised by members of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, including Senators Fletcher and James F. Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina. The latter is regarded as the liaison officer between the Senate and the White House. Senator Byrnes issued a statement explaining the amend-

2 Stables Burn At Derby Track

80 Horses Are Rescued, Including One Race Entry.

Louisville, Ky., May 4 (A.P.).—Two stables were destroyed tonight by fire at Churchill Downs, where approximately 1,000 thoroughbreds are housed, including the 19 entries for tomorrow's Kentucky Derby, but all the racers escaped.

Approximately 80 horses were in the two buildings destroyed, Stables U. and W., including Howard, J. W. Parrish's long-shot entry for the Derby. All were led safely over to the track and the infield with the assistance of several of the first spectators to arrive.

The stables and quarters for trainers and hundreds of stable hands lie in an irregular half circle across the track from the clubhouse where tomorrow some 50,000 will gather for the sixtieth running of the derby.

The buildings, of wooden construction and containing hay, burned rapidly. The flames leaped so high that they could be seen in Louisville several miles away and four alarms were turned in, sending all available fire-fighting equipment to the track. Hundreds of horsemen and visitors here for the Derby telephoned newspaper offices for information.

Stock Market Control Voted by House, 280-84; Move to Pull Teeth Fails

Late Republican Effort for Independent Agency Beaten.

Margin Provisions, Penal Rules Remain

Agricultural Committee Passes Commodity Exchange Bill.

By Robert C. Albright.

With most of its "teeth" still showing, the Fletcher-Rayburn bill for stock-exchange control, regulating every phase of stock-market activity, yesterday was passed by the House, 280 to 84.

Approval came over opposition of a suddenly aggressive Republican minority, after weathering a severe last-minute test—a move to substitute jurisdiction of an independent agency for the Federal Trade Commission.

One of the last major Administration measures slated for action this session, the bill went at once to the Senate, where a similar measure has been favorably reported by the Senate Banking Committee.

Every modifying amendment was beaten down by a large Democratic majority, after four days of almost continuous debate. Only a half dozen clarifyng changes, all sponsored by the House Interstate Commerce Committee, were written into the bill.

Commodity Bill Advanced.

The final vote came within a few hours of House Agriculture Committee approval of the commodity exchange regulation bill, setting up Federal control over grain and other exchanges. Leaders said this bill is not on the Administration's list of preferred measures.

Party lines were broken in the vote on the stock market bill, 11 Democrats joining 73 Republicans in casting a negative ballot, while 234 Democrats, 22 Republicans and 4 Farmer-Laborites voted for it.

As finally approved, the 45 per cent margin "standard," penal provisions, and regulatory powers of the Federal Trade Commission over manipulative practices and so-called abuses, remained intact.

Representative Alfred Bulwinkle, big-bodied, big-voiced North Carolina Democrat, led the fight for an independent agency to administer

English-Born Creator Of Hot Dog Dies at 78

H. M. Stevens Launched Noted Snack in Ohio Baseball Park.

New York, May 4 (A.P.).—Harry Mozely Stevens, who created the American hot dog and built a fortune on it, is dead at 78.

The English-born caterer to the appetites of millions of this country's sport fans succumbed to arterio-sclerosis at his home here yesterday after a long illness.

Starting in a small baseball park at Niles, Ohio, Stevens lived to see his business develop until the far-flung Stevens' concessions covered every major league ball park, many of the largest race tracks, old Madison Square Garden and the new Grand Central Palace.

Stevens sold the first hot dog (so named by the late Tad Dorgan, sports cartoonist), at the Polo Grounds in 1900. Sausages had been sold in rolls before that time, but the hot sausage in the hot roll with mustard or pickle was his own idea. The new delicacy met with immediate acclaim from hungry sports followers and quickly developed into a National institution.

Almost as well known were his double-jointed peanuts. Harry Payne Whitney once defined Stevens as the man "Who parlayed a bag of peanuts into a million dollars." Stevens leased many acres of ground in Virginia where he grew the goobers and had them shipped to New York by the carload.

Born in London, Stevens came to this country in 1882 and settled in Niles, where his wife had friends.

After working as an iron puddler and a book salesman for a while, he hit upon what turned out to be his life career while watching a baseball game. He noticed the score-cards were amateurish and contained no advertising. Forthwith he obtained the concession for selling score-cards, quickly lined up advertising and soon was realizing a neat income. Gradually he extended his business to other ball parks.

The sale of refreshments and cigars was the next step.

Foes Plotting To Sink NRA, Says Johnson

Declares They Desire to "Sail Back to Days of Piracy."

Columbus, Ohio, May 4 (U.P.).—Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson charged tonight that enemies of NRA are trying "to scuttle the whole recovery program, make the Blue Eagle walk the plank, hoist the Jolly Roger on the ship of state, and sail back to the good old piracy that brought the crash of 1929."

In an impassioned defense of NRA before a mass meeting at the State Fair Stadium here, the administrator cited great gains which he said NRA had brought to industry and labor.

He called for continued united public support, warning that otherwise, the "wealthy, powerful" enemies of NRA will split its friends into quarreling groups.

Quoting speakers at the United States Chamber of Commerce meeting in Washington as saying "the President's recovery efforts should cease, because the emergency is over," Johnson replied sarcastically:

"These will be welcome tidings to 10,000,000 unemployed — to many millions of distressed farmers—and to the barely concealed despair that stalks everywhere throughout this Nation."

The chief dangers to NRA, Johnson said, are:

"The reluctance of benefited groups to assume burdens with benefits, the possibility of loss of necessary solidarity through the aid thus given enemies to use group discontents to destroy in detail what they would not even have dared to attack on a solid front.

"They have begun already with the almost ridiculous slogans: 'Take off the Brakes,' &c. Well, what does 'take off the brakes' mean? It means 'back to 1928.' It means, 'let us alone.'

"It is being said now that the

NRA Fixes Tire Prices To End War

Johnson Orders Scale to Last Throughout "Emergency."

Tire "bargain days," which brought general disorder within the $35,000,000 tire industry and joy to every automobile owner in the country for some time, were ended yesterday by an order signed by Administrator Johnson, of the NRA.

So drastic has the price war been that Johnson decided an emergency existed within the industry, necessitating establishment of retail minimum scales on tires and tubes.

The order becomes effective May 14, with expiration of a truce signed by leading distributors a month ago to check heavy financial losses.

Warranties Restricted.

An outstanding clause of the order provided no warranty could be offered tire buyers except a 90-day guarantee against defects in material or workmanship. That was described as an alternative to an agreement within the industry as to what warranties should be made.

Johnson made plain there would be no evasion of the "floor prices" he laid down by explaining the minimum contemplated would be the actual sum realized from the transactions after execution of trade-in allowances or other discounts.

Officials said the minimum prices barely covered the amount retailers would pay mass distributors or wholesalers for tires. They added most dealers probably would sell above the NRA figures to finance their labor costs and earn a profit. Experts said the purpose of the fixed scale was to prevent mail-order houses and other large distributors from driving small dealers into bankruptcy.

The price schedule included every size and grade of tire on the market. Included were automobile balloon casings at $6.70 for class A; $6.10 for class B, and $5.20 for class C—all for size 28 by 4, 75-19. Tubes

Fay Tries a Little Finesse, But Rudy Takes the Trick

New York, May 4 (A.P.).—The twelfth legal round of the Fay Webb-Rudy Vallee tangle ended today in the appellate division of the Supreme Court with a victory for Vallee.

It was an application of Fay Webb Vallee, as wife of the orchestra leader, to withdraw her suit here in which she seeks to set aside a separation agreement. The judges unanimously awarded the round to Vallee by denying his wife's application.

The score to date:

Suits begun—Webb, 2; Vallee, 1.

Actions dismissed—Webb, 1; Vallee, 0.

Actions reinstated—Webb, 1, Vallee, 0.

Applications denied — Webb, 1; Vallee, 0.

Injunctions granted — Webb, 0; Vallee, 1.

In addition, various motions have been granted, denied or shelved on both sides.

Under the separation agreement which the court declined to set aside today, Vallee is paying his estranged wife $100 a month.

Mrs. Vallee's maneuver was interpreted as an attempt to circumvent an injunction of Supreme Court Justice Bernard L. Shientag enjoining her from suing her husband in California.

If she had won the decision in today's round, the injunction, based on Vallee's answer in a previous round, would have necessarily failed.

Father Slays 3 Daughters

No Money to Live, So Gave All Family Poison, He Confesses.

Sapulpa, Okla., May 4 (A.P.).—A father who said "he could not bear to see my family starve" was held without bond here tonight on a murder charge after three of his small children had died from poison he allegedly administered.

Sebe Christian, Creek County attorney, said the father, Chester Barrett, 32, signed a full confession after several hours' questioning today.

A murder charge was filed immediately.

The father's excuse for the act, which not only killed the three little girls but endangered the lives of his wife and four of his five other children, was that he was ill and had no money.

"I have been sick for months and can't work," Christian quoted Barret as saying. "I haven't any money and my family was starving. I couldn't bear it any longer."

The dead are Betty Jo, 6; Mary Kathryn, 3, and Wanda Marie, 2.

Mrs. Barrett and Cora Lucille, 12; Duane, 10; Mildred, 8, and Dorothy, 5, were made seriously ill, but doctors said they would recover.

Barrett also took some of the poison, which was administered last night, but recovered sufficiently to be taken to the courthouse today.

He did not give any of the poison to his 7-month-old baby.

"I could not do that," Christian said Barrett declared. "I hoped that some one would find the baby and take care of her. I didn't want her to die, too."

Bank Officers' Acts Censured At Cleveland

Union Trust Mismanaged Senate Probers Find in Final Report.

(Associated Press.)

A report by its investigating staff that closing of the Union Trust Co. resulted from mismanagement on the part of officers and lax supervision by the State banking department yesterday terminated the Senate Banking Committee's inquiry into Cleveland banks.

The report held that the policies of the $35,000,000 bank were dictated by Joseph R. Nutt, former president and chairman, and by the Van Sweringens, of railroad fame.

Nutt, former treasurer of the Republican National Committee, and O. P. Van Sweringen are now under indictment based on a charge they arranged a "window dressing" loan.

Among findings of the investigating committee was one that three officers and directors of the institution had engaged in an "unlawful collusion for the purpose of wilfully misapplying the moneys, funds and credits of the bank."

This charge was directed at Wilbur M. Baldwin, a former president; C. W. Carlson, a director, and K. V. Painter, a director described as owing the bank $3,000,000 when it closed. Baldwin and Painter are under indictment.

The report filed with the committee by Ferdinand Pecora, its counsel, was signed by Walter H. Seymour, examiner under Pecora, and identified by Frank J. Meehan, the committee's chief statistician.

Its presentation completed, at least for the present, the committee's two-year investigation of stock market and banking practices, which has resulted in much legislative and court action.

This report and one filed Thursday on the Guardian Trust Co., of Cleveland, both contained sharp criticism of the Ohio State banking department and to some extent of the Federal Reserve System, for lax supervision of the two institutions.

Quel Jeu Defeats 60-1 Shot by Nose

Overtakes Douglas F. to Win at Jamaica.

Jamaica Racetrack, May 4 (AP).—One of the biggest upsets of the season missed by a nose with the running of the Laurelton purse of six furlongs here today. Douglas F., a 3-year-old gelding owned by Mrs. S. H. Fairbanks, and ridden by the almost unknown apprentice, J. Lynch, was beaten an inch or so in the last nod by the Arden Farm's Quel Jeu. G. H. Bostwick's Blind Bowboy, the 7-to-10 choice, was third, two lengths away. Quel Jeu, held at 16 to 5, ran the distance in 1:13 over a muddy track.

Douglas F., a few days ago, ran third when as good as 100 to 1 could have been had against his chances to win. Today the gelding was quoted at 60 to 1 when the five sprinters went postward. Lynch broke the bay flier well and hustled him into a lead of two lengths. The long shot ran the highly regarded Blind Bowboy into submission and seemed a certain winner. His chances looked even better when Quel Jeu, rated close up, went back to his old trait of running out at the home turn.

Gus Moreland And Fischer Break Par

Lead Walker Cup Stars in Practice Round at St. Andrews.

ST. ANDREWS, SCOTLAND, May 4 (AP).—Johnny Fischer and Gus Moreland today gave evidence they were very much on their games as they each shaved two strokes from par in conquering St. Andrews to lead their Walker Cup teammates through another series of practice rounds.

Moreland, voted by the old St. Andrews caddies the closest prototype of Bobby Jones among the American youngsters, shot his round in the morning, Fischer in the afternoon.

Fischer got his subpar figures despite a 5-5 finish and scored five consecutive threes from the eighth hole through the twelfth.

Close to Record.

Moreland came close to a St. Andrews record as he kept his card clear of fives until a putt hung on the lip of the cup at the fifteenth. The caddies say, no card without at least one five ever has been turned in.

Johnny Goodman, playing only one round, still was putting too boldly and scored a 79 while Chandler Egan and Max Marston, after morning rounds in 75, had approximate 79s on their second whack at the course as did Capt. Francis Ouimet.

Lawson Little scored a 73 on his only circuit of the day to continue his fine play. Little has been the most consistent of all the team members, his prodigous drives astounding the native onlookers.

Dawson Shoots 72.

Johnny Dawson, the Chicago salesman who is here with the team although not a member of it, scored a 72 and has the caddies almost convinced that he is the best golfer on the course. He used a brassie from the tees.

An informal pool of the Americans' caddies, most of whom have been carrying bags for from 30 to 40 years, disclosed a majority sentiment in favor of Moreland as leading contender for Jones' golfing crown.

"I doubt that we'll see another Bobby," an old chap who often toted the great Jones' clubs said, "but I like this lad Moreland because he takes his golf seriously."

Four other of the nine also preferred Moreland, two voted for Goodman and one each for Fischer and Little.

Hitch Motorists Thumbing Their Way to Oblivion

The wish may be father to the thought, but the American Automobile Association announces that hitch-hiking is on the wane.

Fewer hitch-hikers gave the old familiar thumb gesture along American highways last year than in the boom times of 1929, according to statistics gathered by the association."

Stringent State laws, the fear of motorists that the thumber may be a bandit, and the decline in travel and the tendency of drivers to become "hard-boiled" are given by the AAA as reasons for the return of the hitch-hiker to the brakerods.

Diving Champion to Wed.

Los Angeles, May 4 (AP).—Dorothy Poynton, Olympic high diving champion, and Nelson L. Hill, Hollywood business man, today filed notice of intention to wed.

House Democrats Prove Toughness; Dine on Bear Meat

Those Democratic House leaders, about whom some complaint has been made lately, ought to be tougher now. They've been eating bear meat. Chairman Buchanan of the House Appropriations Committee received a gift of 25 pounds of honest-to-goodness bear meat from a Texas constituent yesterday. He called in Speaker Rainey, Democratic Leader Byrns and other leaders to help him eat it at a luncheon in the House restaurant.

Speaker Rainey thought the bear meat was so good that he asked to have a slice sent upstairs to Mrs. Rainey. The Raineys were still speaking last night.

Survivor of Death Pact Faces Trial

Student May Be Accused of Girl's Murder.

Wayne, Nebr., May 4 (AP).—A college boy who survived a suicide pact with his coed sweetheart tonight faced the prospect of a murder charge.

The youth, Ronald Young, 20, said a dread of a robbery complaint drove him and his comely companion, Nancy Ann Alford, 19, to slash their wrists and arms with his pocket knife. Physicians said Ronald will recover.

Authorities were told by the boy that she cut her arm first and that he then aided her in making other wounds. Five letters were written by the girl before the couple broke into the dental office of Young's father, Dr. L. B. Young, and slashed themselves.

2 Oklahomans Die In Freak Twister

Tulsa, Okla., May 4 (AP).—A freakish storm at Alsuma, 12 miles southeast of Tulsa, today killed at least two persons and destroyed a dozen or more homes. A middle-aged couple named Tackett were the storm's known victims.

Ambulances were rushed to the scene.

Many persons witnessed the merging of a southbound hailstorm with a northbound rainstorm that caused the death-dealing twister. Hailstones were piled nearly a foot deep in places.

Anyone Got a House To Suit This Couple?

Halifax, N. S., May 4 (AP).—A couple, advertising in the classified columns of a local newspaper, have certain likes and dislikes. Their ad:

"If there exists in Halifax any house built since the War of 1812 and guaranteed free from pull-chain plumbing, children, dogs and unmuzzled radios, can its landlord supply warm, sunny, furnished room with kitchen privileges to sullen, uncommunicative couple at $4.50 a week?"

50-Ton Camera Under Secret Construction for U. S. Surveys

Mystery Cloaks Machine Due to Be Largest in World.

What is believed destined to be the largest camera in the world is being assembled somewhere in the basement of the Department of Commerce, with considerable mystery.

A veil of secrecy has been thrown around its construction, but some reports about it have leaked out.

The camera is said to weigh about 50 tons, and be approximately 60 feet square. Its construction is under the supervision of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, the map-making arm of the Government.

The camera is the hub of considerable speculation. Officials were reticent to discuss it yesterday.

"The camera's mechanism has yet to be completed," they said. "When we're ready, we'll tell everyone about it."

The new instrument will be used in chart making, it is understood. It is expected to have a higher degree of accuracy than any similar camera, and that it will be able to catch on one plate impressions which heretofore have required the use of four.

Treasury Seeks 2 Million More Tax of Mellon

Former Secretary Scores Action as Case Goes to Grand Jury.

Pittsburgh, May 4 (AP).—Andrew W. Mellon disclosed tonight that the Government is seeking $1,319,080.90 additional tax and a penalty of $659,540.45 on his income for 1931.

The former Secretary of the Treasury, in a 900-word statement, said the levy was in addition to a "quite substantial sum" already paid for that year. He said also he had given $3,600,000 for charitable, religious and public educational purposes, and intended to appeal for a refund.

Mellon characterized the Government's threatened action as an "utter disregard of statutory regulations" which "confirmed the warning I received more than a year ago from a source high in the councils of the Democratic party (in which I still have many friends) that a definite effort was being made to discredit me in connection with either my administration of the Treasury or my tax affairs."

In Dark on Grounds.

The statement said:

"I am advised that my tax affairs are to be brought before the Federal grand jury here next week, but I am as much in the dark as ever as to any grounds which the Attorney General can possibly have for such extraordinary action in my case.

"The Attorney General has announced that he is acting under a new tax policy of sending to the Federal grand juries income tax cases which under long-settled practice and in accordance with acts of Congress would have been disposed of in the Treasury Department. Later he announced that voluntary offers of settlement had been accepted in a number of cases, based upon payment of deficiency tax, interest and penalty, and that grand jury proceedings in these cases had been dropped.

"In so far as I am concerned, I wish it to be clearly understood that I have made no such offer of settlement and never intend to make one. I owe the Government no additional taxes. I have overpaid, not underpaid, my taxes. Under the circumstances, I should lose my self-respect if I submitted to an unjustifiable tax merely to avoid having my case sent to the grand jury by officials who have refused so far to give me any hearing or even to acquaint me with any grounds for grand jury proceedings.

"Campaign of Terrorism."

"If there is such a Federal tax policy as the Attorney General has announced, it is nothing more than an attempt to regularize a campaign of terrorism with the tax law as the weapon, and most assuredly it does not excuse the action of the Attorney General himself, who for months has been issuing public statements about my tax affairs, regardless of the gross impropriety of thus attempting to prejudice the case of a taxpayer under investigation for later trial by the courts.

"I know something about the administration of the tax laws, but never until now have I known of a case where a taxpayer has been railroaded to the grand jury without first being given a hearing in the Treasury and an opportunity to refute the Government's claims. What makes the Attorney General's action more unjust is the fact that, when I voluntarily gave the Treasury a waiver of the statute of limitations on my 1931 return (the year involved), I was promised by the duly authorized official of the Bureau of Internal Revenue that no action would be taken in my case without first giving me the usual hearing. Certainly, the Government could have lost nothing either in taxes or strategic advantage by treating me like any other taxpayer.

Confirms Warning.

"The utter disregard of statutory regulations and settled procedure, which has been shown in my case, has confirmed the warning I received more than a year ago from a source high in the councils of the Democratic party (in which I still have many friends) that a definite effort was being made to discredit me in connection with either my administration of the Treasury or my tax affairs. What has happened since has made it plain to me that nothing I could have done or left undone at the time of making out my 1931 tax return would have avoided an attack of the kind that is now being made on me. Had I not been a member of the Cabinet of the last three Administrations I would not now be the object of this extraordinary procedure.

"As previously stated, I am still completely at a loss to know what possible grounds there can be for sending my tax affairs to the grand jury. More than two weeks after the Attorney General first announced that he was taking such action in my case, the Treasury sent me a letter, asserting that an additional tax of $1,319,080.90 and a penalty of $659,540.45 are due from me, in addition to the quite substantial amount of tax already paid for the year 1931. Not only was this amount arrived at in the most arbitrary and capricious manner, but the Treasury's letter did not state any reasons which would justify grand jury proceedings. It is apparent that the Treasury was directed by the Attorney General to support his unprecedented action in sending my case to the grand jury before any additional taxes had been claimed by the Governmnet; and it is apparent also that the Treasury, at the Attorney General's instance, in order to give semblance of regularity to hi saction, has asserted this additional tax, although knowing full well that such claims could never be supported in fact or in law.

Claims Deductions Disallowed.

"In computing the tax claimed, the Treasury has not only increased my taxable income in the most arbitrary manner but has also disallowed (pursuant, I understand, to orders) deductions claimed on my return which are allowable under both law and regulations and which have not been questioned in the hundreds of cases other than my own. While the Treasury has thus increased the amount of my taxable income, it has not allowed me, or given me an opportunity to claim, the proper percentage of credit specifically provided by law relating to gifts made by me in 1931 amounting to a total of over $3,800,000 for charitable, religious and public educational purposes, although Department of Justice Agents, who examined my records, had full knowledge of these facts. These agents informed me that there was no shortage or irregularities of any kind in my return, and the report of the Treasury agents, who examined my records last summer shows that, instead of underpaying my tax, I have overpaid it by a substantial amount.

"I am taking an appeal to the United States Board of Tax Appeals, and expect to establish not only that there is no additional tax due, but that I am entitled to a refund of part of the taxes I have already paid. Under the course which the Attorney General has taken, it impossible for this appeal to be determined until after my case is brought before the grand jury. Furthermore, under grand jury proceedings, I am not allowed to be represented by counsel or to present evidence to controvert any charges which the Attorney General may choose to make. So such tactics, an attempt is being made to indict me for not paying a tax that has never been assessed or legally determined. The unfairness, not to speak of the animus, of such a procedure is obvious.

"I want no adjustment of my taxes that is not entirely within my legal rights. But, most important of all, I want an end put to the long campaign of villification that has been carried on and my name cleared of the unwarranted charges which the Attorney General has seen fit to bring against me."

The scene of many a brilliant equestrian show, the old hall burned to the ground at a loss of $150,000. One of the most spectacular fires in recent years, the burning of the hall brought out all Arlington County equipment, several District companies and apparatus at Fort Myer.

Eight motor trucks were destroyed in the riding hall that once sheltered Presidents, diplomats and society folk, as they gazed on Army displays of horsemanship.

Roosevelt Replies To Veterans Today

Due to Answer Demands of Bonus Marchers.

President Roosevelt's answer to the demand of bonus marchers that the Government furnish "room, board and radio time" to veterans allegedly en route to the Capital, is promised this morning.

The committee said that there were 1,000 veterans in the city who would march in the parade. They also estimate that several thousand bonus seekers will be here by May 10.

Cummings Says Mellon Knows Basis of Action

Attorney General Cummings said last night that Andrew W. Mellon, former Secretary of the Treasury, knew "perfectly well" the basis upon which the Treasury had made the additional tax assessments against him, the Associated Press reported.

Cummings, commenting on the statement by Mellon at Pittsburgh that he was in the dark as to the grounds on which his tax affairs were to be brought before the Federal grand jury, and that he had overpaid, not underpaid, his taxes, said:

"Mr. Mellon is not as much 'in the dark' as he would have the public believe.

"He knows perfectly well the basis upon which the Treasury Department made the additional assessment, and why the Department of Justice has taken action.

"He must reconcile himself to being treated like anyone else in a similar situation."

NRA Fixes Prices To End Tire War

for that size were listed at $1.48, $1.23 and $1.11.

Truck and bus casings, 32 by 6, were set at $14.20 and $12.80 for classes A and B, with tubes at $2.70 and $2.25.

As a move to prevent exploitation of any tire because of its classification, Johnson inserted a provision reading:

"No member of the trade shall use the classification of tires and tubes set forth in exhibits G and H for advertising purposes in any form."

Officials said the prices would remain in effect as long as the emergency continued. They interpreted the emergency as a period in which destructive price wars might be expected without Government intervention. The fact that several large manufacturers urged NRA enforcement of a minimum price was stressed.

Objections Listed.

Leon Henderson, head of the NRA research and planning division, predicted the price scale would "prevent sudden death and substitute lingering illness" for the small tire dealer. He said the rates would:

"Provide a measure of protection to local distributors for a period during which the industry must work out readjustments.

"Establish the level below which health price competition becomes destructive and contrary to the public interest.

"Close the price gap between the first and third line tires and force competition between tires on the basis of relative quality, thus protecting the consumer.

"Eliminate use of third and fourth line tires as loss leaders."

Gangster's Girl Placed at Bank Robbery Scene

Mrs. Fontaine Had Flat in Richmond, U. S. Agents Say.

Federal agents announced yesterday that Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Fontaine, wounded sweetheart of a slain Washington gangster, occupied an apartment in Richmond at the time of a $60,000 bank robbery there and the holdup of a Federal Reserve mail truck in which the driver was killed.

Through a Richmond realty firm it was learned the apartment, centrally located, was rented on February 19 and vacated March 9. The place was vacated the day of the killing and exactly one week after the State-Planters Bank had been held up. Rent was paid twice, including for March.

Mrs. Fontaine's picture, police said, resembled a woman who mailed packages and cashed money orders at a postoffice in the business area in February and March. The woman has not been in the substation in recent weeks.

Rent receipts for the Richmond apartment were found in the pockets of William B. Phillips, sweetheart of Mrs. Fontaine, who was killed by a District policeman last month at Adams Mill road and Ontario place northwest, according to police. Investigators were told a couple leased the place under the name of Reed. The man claimed to be a vending machine salesman.

The apartment is only a few blocks from where a deserted car, believed to have been used in the bank robbery, was found, and not far from the postal substation. Nearby is a confectionary where three strange men lunched daily for several weeks, eating at the same table but leaving separately.

Mrs. Fontaine, shot because she "knew too much," was reported improving at an Upper Darby, Pa., hospital.

Financial relief for destitute fishermen and oystermen of Tidewater, Md., is expected from the recent Government relief fund allotted the State, Senator Philips Lee Goldsborough announced yesterday.

The amount expected for Tidewater families is yet undetermined. Maryland received $1,898,902 from emergency relief funds. Of this amount $1,800,000 can be used for general relief.

Employes in Senator Goldsborough's office said they received many letter the past winter from families rendered destitute through loss of fishing equipment in the storm last August. The heavy winter also added to the destitution.

Senators Told Contractors Force "Kick Backs" on Government Jobs.

ployes, may be invited before the committee in executive session to give their experiences and aid in combating existing conditions, he added.

Lax Enforcement Charged.

Government officials have not always sought earnestly to enforce the prevailing wage law, Albert Caya, business agent of the Carpenters' Union, testified.

Charles H. Probert, who forced sub-contractors on the Agriculture Department building at Fourteenth and B streets southwest to return $9,000 in "kick backs" to employes, was demoted, Caya said.

Mr. Caya read affidavits by R. S. Thompson, who was employed on that building, in which the workman swore he was told he had to return pay checks and accept smaller amounts. Thompson said he refused to do so, but when he presented the checks for payment at the bank he found payment had been stopped.

Other men were paid in cash $5 a day on work for which the prevailing wage of $11 a day, Mr. Caya said. Another man was fired because he protested against receiving less than the stnadard wage, he said. Various methods by which the contractors purportedly sought to keep secret their "kick back" practices and other evasions of the wage law were cited by the witness. Some workmen were listed for standard wages and were not paid for the first two days of their work week, it was testified.

Contractors Named.

Aronberg-Fried, general contractors on the building, were cognizant of the practices of the sub-contractors, Mr. Caya said. He named P. J. Fuller and J. P. Stewart as two of the sub-contractors involved.

The C. C. Jones Construction Co., it was charged, sought to evade the law having carpenters sign a so-called partnership agreement. He said this was broken after a hearing at which he forced Government supervising officials to grant when he called workmen off the job. The settlement compelled the company to pay the workers amounts ranging from $49 to $452, he said, adding that this was not satisfactory "but it was accepted by the men because they were out of work and had families to feed."

"Millions of dollars" have been taken from workmen on Government projects in Washington through violations of the law by employers, John Locher, executive secretary of the Washington Building Trades Council, told the committee. He presenter several affidavits back" part of their supposed pay.

Wide Violations Charged.

Contractors on at least 15 Government buildings in Washington have violated the law and compelled workmen to return part of their wages, Mr. Locher said.

Inspectors in charge of one of the War Department projects will be called before the committee to explain why they had permitted underpayment of workers, Senator Walsh said.

Mr. Locher said as much as 50 per cent of wages had been taken from workers. In one instance, he said, workers were given their pay in a large envelope. Inside was a smaller envelope, containing the amount they were to "kick back." If they did not "kick back" the following Monday morning they were not permitted to go to work, he said.

Senator Walsh said the practice might afford grounds for criminal prosecution of the contractors, describing it as "a form of larceny."

"Labor in the United States has been robbed and it is a crime," Senator Royal S. Copeland (Democrat), New York, said. He expressed hope the House would enact the bill passed recently by the Senate to correct the "kick back evil." Workers have been assessed 25 per cent of their supposed pay in New York, he added.

Davis Scores System.

Senator Davis said the practice was widely prevalent in the building trades industry and had been fought by the Labor Department when he was Secretary of Labor..

A Senate inquiry by the House Labor Committee was asked in a resolution introduced in the House yesterday by Representative Bacon (Republican), New York.

Bacon is co-author of the Bacon-Davis prevailing wage act, which requires contractors to pay employes on Federal projects the prevailing wage scale for the area in which the work is done.

Trade Board Clerk Kidnaped, Robbed

Victim Taken to Maryland and Tied to Tree.

Washington police last night were asked to watch for a green sedan, said to have been used n the abduction and robbery of David T. Burgh, 1901 K street northwest, Thursday night.

Prince Georges County police said that Burgh, a Federal Trade Commission clerk, was forced into the sedan by two white men who held him up as he alighted from his parked car at Nineteenth and I streets northwest.

Driven to a lonely woods near Sunnyside, Md., Burgh told the investigating officers he was robbed, stripped of his suit and shirt and tied to a tree. He said the men took $11 cash, a $14 check, a $20 watch and valuable papers.

Loosening hsi bonds about 6 a. m. yesterday, after spending the night in a cold rain, Burgh went to a farmhouse and called for help, he said.

the continuance and further development of those facilities of production and distribution through which a large proportion of the population receives its gainful employment."

In connection with bank deposit guarantees, the convention asked for continuance of the temporary plan. A permanent program was opposed, however, as "unsound and destructive in its character."

Fights U. S. Control.

Reasonable regulation of securities exchanges was approved, but the convention went on record in opposition to Government control of corporations through any securities regulation plan. It also asked that a separate board be set up to administer securities regulation.

On the subject of silver, the chamber took the stand that only international action can deal successfully with silver as a monetary metal.

In connection with the proposed food and drug legislation, it was emphasized that "any attempt by Government authority to impose a censorship in any form upon advertising would be an inexcusable intrusion into private business affairs."

In all, 23 resolutions were adopted, covering a wide field of business interests.

Middle Course Taken.

The 2,000 delegates, after listening for three days to scores of speeches, nearly all of them bearing on the Government's recovery program and most of them critical to some degree, concluded by adopting a middle-of-the-road policy. There was no final statement concerning the degree to which the recovery program had helped business, and there was no condemnation of the program. The resolutions dealt only with individual problems.

The report of the resolutions committee was made after the convention had heard concluding talks by Secretary Wallace and Arthur Krock, head of the Washington Bureau of the New York Times. There was not a word of discussion before the vote was taken.

Wallace told the convention that further restrictions in agriculture might be necessary, but indicated he did not approve limitation on industrial output.

The Cabinet officer declared that agriculture, labor and business were inseparable.

Farm Prosperity Spreads.

"A few hundred million dollars placed in farmers' hands seems to have, so I am told by many business men, greater significance in terms of promoting city prosperity than money placed anywhere else," he said.

Krock declared that business leaders must furnish intelligent criticism if they expected a public hearing.

John Joy Edson, chairman of the board of the Washington Loan & Trust Co., was elected an honorary life vice president. Vice presidents elected were: Matthew S. Sloan, New York; T. Guy Wolford, Atlanta; Felix M. McWhirter, Indianapolis; F. Peavey Heffelfinger, Minneapolis; William V. Hodges, Denver, and Paul Shoup, New York.

The Postoffice Department received assurance yesterday from United Airlines, Inc., that the reorganized company would be ready to fly the mail over the Newark, N. J., to Oakland, Calif., route Tuesday.

This announcement coincided with one from the Army air-mail headquarters that a new and faster schedule, effective immediately, will carry mail from coast to coast in 21 hours. Delivery to the Army Air Corps of six new Martin bombers, capable of 170 miles per hour, made possible cutting 4½ hours from the previous time.

Representatives of several of the commercial air lines awarded new contracts conferred with Government officials yesterday regarding arrangements for shifting the mail routes from the Army to private carriers.

In addition to the Newark-Oakland route, United Airlines reported it would be in a position to take over the Salt Lake City-Seattle and Seattle-Los Angeles runs from the Army Tuesday.

Bids on New Route.

The Postoffice Department will ask for bids on a new route, Daytona Beach, Fla., to St. Petersburg, Fla., within a few days.

Progress was reported yesterday by Eugene L. Vidal, Commerce Department Director of Aeronautics, in efforts to complete the clearing and grading of 1,500 air fields throughout the country.

Work on the projects ceased abruptly with expiration of the Civil Works Administration program on April 1. The program contemplated establishment of emergency and supplemental landing fields along existing or alternate air routes. CWA workers left about 1,000 fields half completed and failed to start work on 500 others. The fields were either owned or leased by municipalities.

Vidal said yesterday he was negotiating with Harry L. Hopkins Federal Emergency Relief administrator, for the completion of the program, with the aid of Federal and State funds.

"An unfinished airport can't be used for anything," he said.

Chamber's Stand Outlined in Resolutions

Following are the texts of some of the resolutions adopted by the United States Chamber of Commerce relative to affairs of Government and business:

Legislation Is Declared Recovery Blow; Cite Securities Act.

Banking legislation—The problems before banks, their depositors, and all who use their facilities are of immediate public importance. Their proper solution will confer wide benefits. We mention specifically some of the steps which should be taken promptly through legislation.

We urge the immediate passage of legislation which will extend the operations of the temporary plan for insurance of deposits under which more than 95 per cent of the depositors in insured banks now receive full protection upon their accounts. The present law providing for a so-called permanent plan should be repealed. It is usound and destructive in its character.

It is in the interest of business recovery that recent legislation should be modified to permit commercial banks, as part of their normal banking operations, to participate in the underwriting of capital issues as well as to allow such banks to make short-term advances in connection with underwritings.

The enforced liquidation of security affiliates of banks by June 16, 1934, is productive of unnecessary issues, is deflationary in character, and should be postponed for a reasonable time to permit of its more orderly accomplishment. There should be careful redefinition of the term "affiliate" so as to exclude such accidental affiliate relationships of banks as are acquired for temporary purposes or result from casual holdings of bank stock by other corporations not engaged in banking. Present requirements for the submission and publication of unnecessary reports of affiliates should be modified.

Would Permit Bankers To Keep Other Posts.

In order that men of integrity and sound business judgment may not be compelled to relinquish positions in institutions where their counsel is needed, the Federal Reserve Board should be given authority to permit, in its discretion, an officer or director to act as such in both a bank and a business enterprise which may in connection with its normal business operations have occasion to make some loans.

Provisions for cumulative voting by shareholders of a National bank should be repealed in the interest of equitable and orderly procedure, and such a bank should be permitted to vote shares of its own stock held by it as trustee. In order that all bank stock may carry the same liability, there should be legislation to eliminate double liability upon all shares of National bank stock, and State governments should consider similar action with respect to all shares of State banks.

Corporate securities — Reasonable regulation of securities exchanges and their members this chamber has not opposed. We emphasize, however, that public interest requires recognition in such legislation, and in its administration, of the necessity of permitting the public exchanges to operate usefully in performing functions of the widest public importance.

Legislation which was proposed originally in Congress, however, transgressed these principles and went far beyond the exchanges and their members, extending to banks everywhere in the country, to every corporation, large and small, although the owners had never thought of listing securities upon an exchange, and to every investor in any corporate security. After extensive hearings, the measure has been modified, although the scope of its provisions has not yet been made clear.

That such legislation should not be extended into fields where there is no clear justification should be axiomatic, and that it should not contain provisions which are not definite and understandable by legislators and public would seem obvious. However, much additional improvement should be made in the pending legislation, the importance to the Government and the public of proper administration makes appropriate a Federal agency devoted entirely to the supervision of matters relating to securities. Upon the earnings of business corporations the Government depends for a large part of its tax revenues and a great part of the savings of the country are dependent for their security. Upon the increased activities of these corporations the country depends chiefly for reemployment. Recovery depends largely upon freedom of issue and distribution of sound corporate securities.

Securities Act Called Obstacle to Recovery.

Securities act of 1933—The fact that normal means of financing legitimate business enterprises are made unavailable through governmental action furnishes no justification for resorting to public funds provided through public agencies for the financing of such private interests. The logical step and the only one consistent with the public interest is to remove existing impediments to honest enterprise.

It has been amply demonstrated that such impediments have been caused by provisions of the Securities Act of 1933 that are aside from and unnecessary to those essential remedial purposes of the statute which are praiseworthy and merit the support of the business world.

The Securities Act of 1933 is so restrictive as to make practically impossible much financing that is necessary for economic recovery and for the orderly conduct of business enterprises of high integrity, while laying at the same time a heavy burden of expense and delay upon the issuance of permissible securities. This measure, originally introduced "to afford protection to the public with the least possible interference to honest business," has affected adversely industries of the country not engaged in the business of dealing in or creating securities, as well as those related to financing facilities.

Congress should adopt as soon as possible in the present session amendments to the act which will overcome its effects in retarding the legitimate transactions in securities necessary to provide for the continuance and further development of those facilities of production and distribution through which a large proportion of the population receives its gainful employment.

Such amendments should provide with other things for the modification of the nature, extent and duration of the liabilities, civil and criminal, which the act imposes upon officers, directors, underwriters, and experts not only for their own acts but for the acts of others and for conditions beyond their control, and thus relieve normal business practices and prudent and efficient management from the impracticable requirements and unnecessarily punitive features of the present act. Time-honored defenses of good faith and proper intent, employment of ordinary business caution, and reliance upon reports of qualified experts should be definitely sanctioned as applicable in civil and criminal proceedings authorized by the terms of this statute. Requirements as to registration statements and prospectuses should be simplified, unnecessary provisions eliminated, and emphasis placed upon essential facts having a proper relation to security values.

Self-Control of Nation's Industry Advocated.

Code Administration — According full appreciation for the accomplishments of the National Recovery Administration in support of the principle of self-government of industry incorporated in the law, we point out that representative and efficient trade associations are the recognized means of industrial self-government. Nothing should be allowed to minimize their importance. They can be utilized to assist the processes of information and supervision belonging to the Recovery Administration.

The administration of codes for our important fields of enterprise engaged in interstate commerce is now assuming major significance. It was these fields of interstate commerce to which the provisions of the National industrial recovery act were directed and in which there was need of the relief for common effort which Congress could give in aid of recovery. These are the codes, consequently, upon which attention should be concentrated if there are to be the beneficial results which can be realized.

The spirit of the law and the nature of codes make code administration essentially a process of voluntary compliance. The law provides means for hearing of any persons subject to codes who do not comply and gives them an opportunity to have decision respecting the application of code provisions, with a chance to follow the decision before there is a question of compulsory measures or penalties. The task of code authorities requires that upon their request these proceedings should be started promptly in those cases in which code authorities may have occasion to invoke these provisions of the law.

Code authorities should be subject to no delays with respect to the interpretations of their codes which they must make. Such interpretations should be subject only to disapproval by the National Recovery Administration, since requirement of approval in advance may very well have disastrous consequences for the most diligent and able efforts at self-government by code authorities.

In administration of retail codes local code authorities inevitably have an essential part. They should have adequate opportunity to deal promptly and effectively with local problems. Necessarily a number of such codes have their principal application in each community of any size. There should therefore be development of local means for local coordination of the activities of the different local code authorities in the retail field.

Advise Caution in Curb on Food and Drug "Ads."

Food and drug laws—There was before this meeting a report of a committee of the chamber respecting changes which have been proposed in the Federal food and drugs act. In the recommendations contained in this report we concur. We believe there should be legislation requiring the same truthfulness in advertising, with respect to foods, drugs, and cosmetics, as in the labeling of articles to which Federal labeling laws apply. At the same time, the value of proper advertising as an economical and efficient means of distribution should be maintained as in the public interest, and all attemps, legislative or administrative, to restrict it as a means for reaching and developing markets should be opposed. Any attempt by Government authority to impose a censorship in any form upon advertising would be an inexcusable intrusion into private business affairs.

Discretionary powers to impose conditions upon manufacture and distribution of articles coming within the scope of these laws should be granted to administrative authorities only to the extent clearly necessary for the effective enforcement of the laws. The provisions of such laws, as well as penalties for their violation, should bear a definite relationship to the protection needed in the public interest. Industry itself should be allowed to continue its progress in arriving at standards of quality for all articles, whether within or outside these laws, to which such standards can properly be applied.

Other Resolutions Are Summarized.

A summary of other resolutions follows:

Silver—Only international action can successfully deal with silver in its monetary uses.

Individual Rights—Fear expressed that restrictive legislation applied to agriculture may be extended to business and other lines of endeavor. Rights guaranteed American citizens should assure them protection in their lawful occupations.

Governmental Inroads on Private Enterprise Criticized.

Promotion of Export Trade—Our Government should continue active support of our foreign trade. Stabilization of the dollar which will permit long-term international trade contracts, will be of further assistance. The pending legislation which would confer new powers upon the President to enter into trade agreements can have beneficial results if the provisions already added, including opportunity for interested industries to be heard before their situation is changed, are supplemented with a provision assuring our industries that they will not be placed at disadvantage in their home market. Government should continue support of American merchant marine.

Employment Relations.—The right of employers and the rights of employes to participate in determination of methods for discussion and negotiation of employment relations should not be abridged. Proper maximum working hours necessarily will vary among industries and in the same industry at different times. They should accordingly be determined by code authorities without any attempt at their determination through the arbitrary processes of legislation. Each industry should continue to be given separate consideration in the determination of the minimum wage provisions of its code with recognition of community and sectional differentials existing prior to the passage of the National industrial recovery act.

Favors Voluntary Jobless Benefits.

Unemployment Reserves.—Suitable voluntary plans for providing unemployment reserves and other benefits for employes have been consistently advocated by the chamber. Proposals for utilizing the taxing power of the Federal Government in an attempt to induce States to enact compulsory unemployment reserve laws meeting Federal specifications depart from our established principles of government.

Forest Conservation.—The Government should proceed with a program of cooperation with the lumber industry in carrying out the conservation provisions of its code.

Federal taxation — The essential characteristic of a revenue act passed by Congress should be provision of an adequate amount of revenue through fair and equitable levies. It should reflect no discriminations based merely on the forms of business organizations or on type of income. The income tax should always be levied upon real income in the ordinary and generally understood meaning of the term. Taxation of gains should be accomplished by corresponding opportunity for deduction of losses.

Wheat processing tax—Exemption from the processing tax paid on wheat to farmers who exchange their wheat for flour has so disturbed the marketing of grain that the exemption should be eliminated.

Federal expenditures—The present executive budget is not sufficient for public information. There should be added, for announcement at the beginning of each fiscal year, the real budget for expenditures in accordance with the actual appropriations made by Congress. Emergency expenditures should be so shaped that they do not enter the field of private enterprise. All agencies making emergency expenditures should be brought under one central control.

State and local expenditures—Business organizations should continue to fight against high level of expenditures. Waste frequently results from multiplicity of local governments. In all such cases the need for simplification is obvious. Effective debt limits should be adopted.

Interstate Commerce Freedom Is Urged.

Federal sales tax legislation—Congress should not attempt in any way to relinquish to State and local governments the power and duty entrusted to Congress to keep interstate commerce free from any and all kinds of interference imposed by any other political unit.

Government Competition. — Federal, State and local governments should refrain from entering any field of business which can be successfully conducted by private enterprise. Government agencies engaged in competition with private enterprises should refrain from every form of unfair competition.

Railroad Rate Policies. — Greater responsibility for railroad rates should be placed upon the railroad managements. The law should be amended to permit simplification of procedure in rate cases.

Railroad Consolidation.—Congress should adhere to a policy which contemplates the maintenance of railroad transportation as the central part of our transportation system, and which encourages only voluntary consolidation of railroad properties, as consolidation is justified through increased economic efficiency.

Bankruptcy Laws.—Revision of the Federal bankruptcy laws should be undertak.. by Congress. The purpose should be to strengthen these laws in order that fraud at the expense of creditors may be prevented, without imposition upon honest, but unfortunate, debtors of undue burdens.

City Planning.—The Chamber of Commerce indorses the policy of properly legalizing the preparation and adoption of official plans by properly constituted boards having jurisdiction in their respective areas of government.

Business Men's Organizations.—At no time has there been greater occasion for large investment of experience, judgment and time in the work of commercial organizations.

Ibn Saud Plan To Unite Arabs Nears Reality

(Copyright, 1934, by the Associated Press.)

London, May 4.—King Ibn Saud's long-cherished dreams of duplicating the career of Mahomet in uniting all of Arab-land was a long step nearer completion tonight, although three European governments were ready to call a halt in his advances.

By defeating the Imam Yahya, ruler of Yemen, and sending the Yemeni tribesmen in headlong flight from the important port of Hodeidah, the powerful ruler of Saudi Arabia has made himself master of the greater part of Arabia.

Ibn Saud was reported tonight to be striking inland from Hodeidah toward Sana, the capital of Yemen. A reported revolution in Sana caused British officials to land a police unit at Hodeidah. Great Britain and Italy sent warships and planes to protect their interests in the area, and France pondered what course to take.

Europe's Plans Awry.

The conquest of Yemen by Ibn Saud's fierce and well-equipped warriors means that he has destroyed the balance of power among the Arabian rulers and sultans, a situation European nations with interests in that part of the world wanted greatly to preserve, and added to his dominions the richest Arabian area in which Europeans are greatly interested.

Frontiers of the British protectorates of Aden and Hadhramaut have become Ibn Saud's frontiers, and he will be a close neighbor of French and Italian interests across the Red Sea.

Because of this, and the fact that a breakdown of the civil administration of Hodeidah followed the flight of Yemeni fighters, the British warship Penzance and royal air force planes were quickly dispatched to the port.

Occupation Threatened.

A threat of British occupation of Hodeidah was indicated in official quarters here as the British government awaited assurances that Ibn Saud will restore order.

An armed British police force was landed following reports of a revolutionary outbreak at Sana. A lack of dispatches, meanwhile, confirming the reported death of the Imam of Yemen convinced government quarters here that that ruler is still alive.

Three Italian gunboats were ordered from their Red Sea base to Hodeidah. This action was described in British official circles as entirely justified as a protection for Italian subjects and interests in the zone.

Army Well Equipped.

The advance of Ibn Saud's modernized army—which has tanks, artillery, and other efficient equipment—toward Sana was expected to be slowed up because of the mountainous terrain. The ruler announced, however, that he was striking there soon.

The entire invasion of Yemen, a state bounded by the Red Sea, the desert, and British-controlled Aden, was regarded here as an unexpected development in view of reports that the Imam accepted peace terms on April 12 in what started out early in April to be a tribal dispute over boundaries, and became what many think may be a "Greater Arabia" movement.

Ibn Saud Pledges Foreigners Safety

(Copyright, 1934, by the Associated Press.)

Cairo, Egypt, May 4.—Assurances that he will be responsible for the administration of territories conquered in a victorious drive over Yemen were contained in a message received here tonight from Ibn Saud.

The communication, sent by the monarch himself to his legation here, confirmed Ibn Saud's occupation of lands held by the Iman of Yemen.

"King Ibn Saud's government considers itself responsible for the administration of the occupied territories," the telegram said.

"I assure you the government's mission will be based on justice and will insure every protection to foreign residents in the occupied territories, who will be treated on the same footing as all others."

Radio Waves and Ripples

EDWARD DAVIES, soloist for N. B. C.'s Sentinels, than whom there are few bigger barytones, either in physique or voice.

THE time is about ripe for another fireside chat with President Roosevelt. His friends on all sides are said to be urging another accounting of his stewardship in that facile, heart-to-heart manner which won him instant and tremendous support some months back. The President himself is said to be favorably inclined toward a repeat performance.

In the studios the event is being taken for granted. The guessers are now picking the time and place. Most of them are willing to lay odds that the place won't be the White House. They expect the Roosevelt showman ship to lead him to a tie-in with an occasion and a personage that have become immortal—Gettysburg and Lincoln.

Already Columbia is making plans for a Presidential broadcast of exercises at the famous battlefield May 30. That, think C. B. S. minds, is the time and the place for a President to turn to the people. They believe Mr. Roosevelt thinks so, too.

They aren't entirely forgetting a joint session of Congress to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the death of Lafayette 10 days earlier, at which the President is to speak. But they don't think the stage trappings are just right.

A special radio service originating in Washington's Willard Hotel and emanating to the Nation via N. B. C.'s red network and to Palestine, England and France via shortwave, will commemorate the laying of the cornerstone of a new synagogue in Jerusalem Monday night.

Commemoration principals will be the delegates to the annual convention of the United Synagogue of America here. The program is timed to begin simultaneously with the cornerstone laying at the Jerusalem synagogue, funds for which were raised by the convening organization and the Women's League of the United Synagogue.

Special prayers and liturgical selections will be heard, and speeches by Dr. Cyrus Adler, president of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, and Abraham Newman, of Philadelphia.

NOT many days ago Broadway wise ones were predicting an early decline for Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians; and the ink in the theatrical periodical that printed their predictions could not have been very dry when Fred was signing a renewal with his present sponsor that will keep him on the air 39 weeks after Thursday, the expiration date of his present contract.

The Pennsylvanians will be making their twenty-eighth broadcast for their current sponsors on the first program of the renewed series and their eighty-first program for C. B. S. Their cigarette patron paid for 52 performances, and they were heard once on a sustaining broadcast from a prom at Lawrenceville School in New Jersey.

New York being but five hours from Washington by train, Columbia's plans for a world-wide DX program from WABC, its Manhattan key station, this month, aren't particularly exciting, unless you consider them an indication that long-distance listeners have not been entirely forgotten.

The International DX'ers Alliance is helping out with the program, which will come from the Park Central Hotel, where one of the youngest important band leaders in the country, Charlie Barnet, is working . . . May 25, 12 to 12:30 a. m.

Columbia's weekly "Republican Reaction" series, in which the G. O. P. has one of its first opportunities for sustained New Deal sniping via radio, begins with Senator Reed, of Pennsylvania, Friday night.

Reed, who is faced with a fight for his seat this fall, replaces Representative Chester Bolton, of Ohio, who was scheduled originally.

BLACKIE BEAR

By D. SAM COX

Who-Who Gets a Daytime Supper

When Jay Bird finished his breakfast, he went out and settled down on the water shelf, and this is what he told them: "When I left here the other day, I flew straight down Bear Creek and I went first to Who-Who Owl's house. When I got there, Who-Who was fast asleep, and I had to knock on his door several times before I woke him up. When he came out and saw me he began laughing harder than I had been laughing, and you know it takes something awfully funny to make wise old Who-Who laugh. When he stopped laughing he told me what was so funny.

"Well, it was this way: Who-Who had been going to Mr. Man's house every night and getting him a chicken for supper. He knew Mr. Man didn't have any gun and therefore couldn't shoot him, and so Who-Who got so that sometimes he wouldn't even wait until dark, but would go along late in the afternoon and pick up a chicken out in the yard before they had gone to bed. One day Mr. Man saw him and he picked up a rock and threw it at Who-Who but, instead of hitting him, the rock struck and killed a nice young duck, and Who-Who flew down and picked him up and ate him for his supper.

"Who-Who told me that Mr. Man got awfully mad, and said things about him that were not very nice, but that did not keep him from enjoying his nice little duck. And Who-Who said that Mr. Man certainly did have to work mighty hard these days, since his donkey had gone. One day he saw Mr. Man coming from the mill with a heavy bag of meal on his back, and every once in a while he would have to put it down and sit down and rest before he could go on. And he said he had seen Mr. Man bringing in big logs of wood on his shoulder, and that one day he saw Rover

"Then Joe Reep came over and he had a lot to tell about Mr. Man. He said Mr. Man just had to walk back to town to get some sugar and coffee and tobacco and some other little things that he could carry on his back, and that when he came back to Cool Spring to eat his dinner he ate it by jerks and kept looking around just like he thought somebody was going to catch him; and that he didn't smoke his pipe nor take a nap, but hurried home and got there a long time before night. But none of that is what I was laughing about," said Jay Bird. "That was all funny enough, but I saw the funniest thing in the world, and it would not only make a bird laugh, or even a dog, but it would make a bear laugh.

"Oh, mamma, the bread is burning," shouted Jenny Bear. Then Betty jumped up and went into the kitchen and told Jay Bird not to tell any more until she got back.

Seven Compete In Scholarship Finals Today

Catholic University Award at Stake; Four Aim at Engineering.

The school of engineering of the Catholic University of America has been designated as their goal by Robert M. Winfree, Albert J. Laun, John P. Walsh and Joseph Michalowicz, four of the seven candidates in the second of the campus finals of The Washington Post scholarship competition, being conducted today in McMahan Hall at the Catholic University.

Two other finalists, Robert H. Gardiner, jr., and Earle W. Martyn, have declared their ambition to enter the University's College of Arts and Sciences, while Richard Logan, recommended by his teachers at Western High School as exceptionally promising in a number of subjects, is delaying final choice of specialization.

Examinations based upon both oral interviews and written work, and dealing in part with the essays on the governmental topics by which candidates won the right to compete for the final award, will open promptly at 10 a. m. today, with Dr. Otto J. Ramler, chairman of the university's committee on undergraduate admissions, serving as head of a special examiner's committee.

Group Closely Matched.

That the selection will be difficult was the unanimous opinion of the examiners last night, after examination of essays and high school records.

"They are apparently closely matched," declared Dr. Ramler. "Any one of them would doubtless do credit to the scholarship award."

Winfree, 17-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Winfree, of 112 V street northeast, is captain of McKinley High School's Company A, and a member of that school's Pharos Honor Society. He intends to specialize in actuarial insurance while pursuing the engineering course. The essay which brought him victory in Tech's division finals was on "The Four Major Panics of the Nation."

Laun is a leader in both scholastics and athletics in Mount St. Mary's Preparatory School at Emmitsburg, Md. He is 18, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert G. Laun, of Irvington, Baltimore, Md. He is vice president of his class, captain of his school's basket ball team, and a member of its baseball and tennis teams. His prize-winning essay was on "The Influence of Military Leaders on American History."

Walsh a Mathematician.

Walsh is adjutant of the cadet corps of the local St. John's High School, as well as an outstanding student at that school, with special talent in mathematics. The essay with which he defeated more than 200 opponents in school and division finals was on "The Monroe Doctrine and Pan-Americanism." He is the 17-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs John R. Walsh, of 1347 Shepherd street northeast.

Michalowicz, 18-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Roch Michalowicz, of 1037 New Jersey avenue northwest, will concentrate on electrical subjects if he wins the award. He has operated for more than a year his own radio laboratery and rates physics as his favorite subject. He has served as general stage technician in Gonzaga High School, from which he is graduating in June. He also chose "The Monroe Doctrine and Pan Americanism" as the subject of his essay.

Gardiner, honor senior at the Agricultural High School of Boyce, Va., won through to the campus finals with an essay on "The Depressions of 1837, 1873, 1893 and 1929." He is 16, the son of Dr. and Mrs. Robert H. Gardiner, of Boyce, Va., and desires to follow his father's profession of pharmacy. He is an active member of his school's basket ball, baseball and tennis teams, and of the Boyce Junior Improvement League.

Martyn Leans to Economics.

Martyn won in division finals at Eastern High School with an essay on "The Constitutional Implications of the Recovery Program." He is 17 and the son of Mr. and Mrs. William T. Martyn, of 211 Thirteenth street northeast. At Eastern he is quartermaster sergeant of cadets and active in debating, history and dramatic clubs. His studies of present-day social experiments have awakened a strong ambition to major in economics and social sciences at college.

Logan, 17, is the son of Mrs. George Logan, of 927 Twenty-sixth street northwest. He is intensely interested in economic and social studies and chose "The Pros and Cons of Inflation" as the subject of the essay which won in division finals at Western High School. He is a cadet, an eagle Scout, president of a chapter of the Sons and Daughters of the Republic, and teacher of a Sunday class at Peck Memorial Chapel, in Georgetown.

Following their examinations, the seven finalists will be guests at a luncheon in the campus main dining hall. The hospitality committee, in charge of Father William H. Russell, of the faculty, and Henry F. Begnard, of the student group, will conduct the guests through campus bulidings, and following this the party will be guests of The Post in a sightseeing trip which will cover the Capitol, other Federal buildings, residential suburbs parks, Arlington and the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

Will Receive Medals.

Returning from this tour, the candidates will convene in the Music Hall to receive medals for division honors from The Post, and to hear announcement of the scholarship winner.

Last night the seven contestants were honor guests of the hospitality committee at a box party in the Palace Theater, to witness the premiere of George Arliss in "The House of Rothschild."

The competition's remaining finals will be conducted next week, with ten boys contesting Wednesday at Georgetown University for a scholarship offered by its school of foreign service, and seven boys and 19 girls vieing on Saturday at the American University for two scholarships, one for a boy and one for a girl, offered by that institution's College of Liberal Arts.

Ernestine Greene, of the local Cardoza High School, won a full tuition scholarship at Howard University in the finals last Saturday.

United Appeal Workers Report Results in $35,000 Drive.

Contributions, which brought the total raised thus far in the United Jewish appeal over the $5,000 mark, were reported at the second workers' luncheon at the Jewish Community Center yesterday.

The campaign goal is $35,000 and Isidore Hershfield, drive chairman, who presided at the meeting, expressed confidence that $10,000 would be raised this week-end.

The Rev. Louis J. Novick and Morris Garfinkle were commended for bringing in the bulk of contributions listed in the past few days. Their division collected $860 in cash and $700 in pledges.

Louis E. Spriegler, drive director, read newspaper dispatches concerning the plight of German-Jewish refugees. He quoted J. G. McDonald of the League Commission for refugees as saying that "tens of thousands of refugees were destitute, homeless and uncertain of tomorrow."

Mr. Hershfield announced that a new drive division has been formed by the Jewish War Veterans and the auxiliary of this organization. Dr. Ivvy A. Pelzman, commander of the veterans, and Adjutant Tobias C. Cooper, head of the men workers, and Mrs. Falk Harmel, the women's auxiliary.

Pastor-Farmer Enters Race For Frederick Commissioner

The Rev. J. S. Bowlus Long Active in Republican Affairs.

Middletown, Md., May 4 (Spl.).—The Rev. John S. Bowlus, pastor of Pleasant View Church of the Brethren, near Burkittsville, today announced as a candidate for Frederick County Commissioner on the Republican ticket. He is the second Republican in the county to aspire to this office, the other being Jesse Renner, of New Midway.

The Rev. Mr. Bowlus has been actively identified with the Republican party all of his life, but has never aspired to public office. It is believed to be the first time that a minister has sought an elective office in this county.

Although the Rev. Mr. Bowlus has served as pastor of the Pleasant View Church for nearly 30 years, he had never received any salary up until about six months ago. It was the custom to present him with a purse of money each Christmas, but this, it is said, rarely exceeded $100. About six months ago, the congregation voted to pay the pastor an annual salary of $300.

In addition to ministering to the welfare of his congregation, the Rev. Mr. Bowlus is the supervising elder of the Brownsville Church of the Brethren in Washington County, which has membership of more than 400 persons.

When not engaged in the work of the church, the Rev. Mr. Bowlus tills a 76-acre farm near Burkittsville.

Dairymen Warned On Surplus Fight

Petitions in Washington County Attacked.

Hagerstown, Md., May 4 (Spl.).—Milk producers in this section who ship milk into Pennsylvania were warned today by Daniel Buckley, secretary of the Allied Dairy Farmers Association, to be wary of petitions making their appearance. The petitions, said Buckley, urge farmers to oppose an order of the Pennsylvania Milk Control Board.

About 200 farmers in Washington County, who ship to Pennsylvania, are members of the association, which has been waging a fight for higher prices and the abolition of the basic surplus plan.

"To sign the petitions is to play right into the distributors' hands," said Buckley.

The petitions call for opposition to general order No. 6 of the Milk Control Board, which is designed to prevent the return of the basic-surplus-classified use plan of paying producers.

Teachers Criticized Over Science Clubs

Held Poorly Qualified in West Virginia Schools.

Montgomery, W. Va., May 5 (Spl.).—Science clubs in West Virginia high schools are in charge of teachers poorly qualified for the work, according to a report of the activities committee of the West Virginia Academy of Science at its annual meeting here today.

The report, submitted by Wallace Smith, of New River State College, chairman, added that the functions of the clubs themselves are not wide enough to carry out their purpose of advancing an interest in science among pupils.

Another report from Dr. R. C. Caldwell, West Virginia University, indorsed a suggestion that one hour laboratory study or teaching be considered as equivalent to one hour of lecture study or teaching.

Viscose Plant Hikes Wages for 3,000

Parkersburg, W. Va., May 4 (Spl.).—Announcement of a wage increase for all workers of its Parkersburg plant, employing about 3,000, was announced today by the management of the Viscose Co., after union representatives and company officials discussed equalization of wage rates between the Parkersburg plant and plants in Virginia and Pennsylvania.

The local wage boost, company officials said, had no relation to a peace pact signed before the Regional Labor Board in Philadelphia after walkouts had been threatened in all viscose plants.

Virginia to Give U.S. Blue Ridge Deeds Shortly

Shenandoah Park Titles to Be Ready for Transfer About May 15.

(Associated Press.)

The National parks office disclosed yesterday, after a visit from William E. Carson, Virginia conservation commissioner, that deeds to the Shenandoah National Park area are expected to be presented to the Government by Virginia about May 15.

There will be no particular ceremony when Carson hands over to Arno B. Cammerer, park director, the batch of deeds, because before the Government can accept officially titles must be gone over by the Justice Department.

The ceremony will be held after Government lawyers have approved titles and surfacing of the 35-mile roadway between Panorama and Swift Run Gap.

Park officials said they hoped it could be held by Labor Day. They predicted that would be the earliest, since road contractors working 18 hours daily have said they could not finish their task before some time in August.

The minimum park area, decreed by act of Congress, is 160,000 acres and park officials said Carson informed them an area slightly larger than that would be deeded over. The lands have been acquired by Virginia through condemnation.

Official acceptance will be by Secretary Ickes.

Approval of the titles, parks officials said, would be the signal for letting contracts for the first leg of the roadway between Front Royal and Panorama. Plans and specifications are ready for the 10-mile stretch south of Front Royal.

The road eventually will be built from Front Royal to Waynesboro, a distance of about 100 miles. At Waynesboro, it is to connect with a parkway linking the Shenandoah area with Great Smoky Mountain National Park in North Carolina and Tennessee.

Opening of the gates of the Shenandoah Park is expected to attract tens of thousands of tourists annually to that mountain area. Parks officials have expressed belief that it would be one of the most valuable of all National parks, because of its proximity to the heavily populated Eastern metropolitan areas.

Tax Ruling Issued On Consumer Sale

Official in West Virginia Clarifies Law.

Charleston, W. Va., May 4 (Spl.).—West Virginia farmers who market their own products through isolated sales are not required to pay the State 2 per cent consumers' sales tax, Fred L. Fox, State tax commissioner, has ruled.

When dealers in farm products, however, engage in the business of marketing their own products, or the products of others, to the extent of directly competing with the general merchandiser of farm products, Fox held, they are required to collect the tax from customers.

"Sales taxable under the consumers' sales tax law," Fox stated, "are those made in the ordinary course of business when repeated and successive sales of like character are engaged in, and do not include isolated sales. Farm products include all grain, vegetables, milk and dairy products, poultry and poultry products and fruits."

Bright's Absence Blocks Protests

Richmond, May 4 (Spl.).—Plans of the International Labor Defense of Richmond to send a delegation to Mayor Bright today to insist that he appoint a committee to investigate charges of police brutality to colored persons were postponed because of the mayor's absence from the city.

Kelly says the organization has a number of affidavits of witnesses to illegal actions by the police, and will present them to any committee appointed by the mayor, which committee, he insists, must have a majority of colored persons.

Securities Act Damage Suits' Curb Proposed

Fletcher Wants Recoveries Limited to Amount of Actual Loss.

ments were designed to meet complaints, without weakening the law to protect investors.

The tall, silvery haired Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Oklahoma, paused in his fight for silver legislation to propose a rider to the stock market bill which would greatly modify the securities act, repealing all civil liability sections an in their place prescribing that the common law shall apply.

Acts on Own Initiative.

Senator Thomas acted on his own initiative, and it is doubted whether his proposal stands any prospect of approval in face of the amendments projected later in the day by Administration adherents in the Senate.

The Fletcher amendment provides for a substantial modification of section 11 of the Securities Act, which deals with "civil liabilities on account of false registration statement." In the first place, the amendment would limit recovery for damage resulting from misstatements or omissions in registration statements to those persons "who in reliance on such statement or omission acquire" a security.

The amendment then proceeds to rewrite a part of subsection (b) of section 11 so as to provide that no person, other than an issuer, shall be liable who can prove that, as regards statements by experts, public officers or extracts from public documents, he had no reasonable ground to believe and did not believe at the time that such statements were untrue or misleading.

Language Just Restatement.

In a statement explaining the changes, Senator Fletcher asserted that "the new language only restated what was already in the law, but that "it seems that the section as written, though meaning the same thing, has had an unfortunate psychological effect."

The original language, however, was further restricted by a new provision which in effect would absolve officers and directors of a corporation from liability in connection with an untrue or misleading statement made by an expert or an auditor if they can show that such expert was "selected after reasonable investigation and with reasonable ground for belief in his ability for such purpose."

House Passes Stock Control Bill; Modifications Are Beaten

Rayburn Denounces Move.

Representative Sam Rayburn, short, stocky and bald, denounced the move as an effort to defeat effective regulation. The chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, who managed the bill on the floor, rallied Democrats to hissupport, declaring a vote for the Bulwinkle amendment was a vote against the bill.

In vain, Representative Bulwinkle pointed out an almost identical provision is in the Senate draft of the bill; and Mrs. Isabella Greenway, lifelong friend of Mrs. Roosevelt, declared she was both for th bill and the amendment, and the two were not inconsistent.

On division and tellers votes, the amendment was beaten 143 to 95 and 145 to 102. When Representative Schuyler Merritt (Republican), Connecticut moved to recommit the bill on this issue, the amendment was again defaied, by about the same margin that the bill was passed, 285 to 84.

Insull Assails Bill.

Earlier, Republican Leader Bertrand H. Snell, whose silence during debate led to reports he would vote for the measure, delivered a heated broadside against it.

"The bill goes so far in the regulation and regimnetation of business, that I am not willing to support it," he said.

He declared Congress almost daily is enacting legislation imposing additional restrictions upon business.

"It is just a question of how long you want to go on building up here in Washington a great bureaucratic control," he said, "atking hope and courage away from the small business man."

There was a sharp interchange between Snell and Representative Carl Mapes, Michigan, minority member of the committee, who supported the legislation, declaring it provides "only for a fair and honest market place."

"It goes much farther," said Snell. "I think it is a mistake to place new regulations on the statute books every day. A business man hardly has time to recover one day from burdens put on him the day before."

Rayburn Defends Draft.

Representative Rayburn several times took the floor when amendments threatened, and once or twice went out of his way to defend members of the "brain trust," reputed to have had a part in drafting the bill, and James M. Landis, member of the Federal Trade Commission. He insisted the bill reported by the committee was its own handiwork.

"I don't know whether it is a 'brain trust' or not," said Rayburn. "But I'll say this—if there is one, Jim Landis is entirely capable of being on it."

Among the clarifying amendments agreed upon by the committee and accepted by the House at the last minute was one giving the President authority to say which members of the Federal Trade Commission shall administer provisions of the act.

Few Democrats took the floor against the bill, although several members of the majority party, including Representative Jon Rankin, of Mississippi, and Representative John O'Connor, of New York, were thrown in the breach against modifying amendments.

O'Connor denied that members of Congress from New York were influenced by "the Wall street crowd," but he charged Representative Merritt, who made them inority report against the bill, "comes from a district in Connecticut in which those gentlemen make their homes."

Calls Bill Camouflage.

One of the few Democratic critics of the measure was Representative William H. Sutphin, of New Jersey, who charged it was "camouflage, making something look like nothing."

"I believe this bill will have a tendency to cause more deflation than we have ever seen up to the present time," he said.

President Plans Jamestown Trip

Johnson Says Foes Try to Sink NRA

program is deliberately being weakened by the Administration in answer to these attacks. It is not being weakened.

"Nobody can speak for the President, but I can speak of him. What is happening is that the true outline of Franklin Roosevelt's moderate, common-sense and deliberate plan is being made clear by experience. Don't let that fall on deaf ears."

NRA is an experiment, Johnson conceded, "but it is an experiment under complete Governmental control and absolute flexibility. After half a year of NRA, it is certainly too early to talk about returning to a system which has demonstrated its futility for nearly half a century, ending in ruin."

The essence of NRA is that it gives the people a little control over their own affairs, Johnson said. And he held that also was basis of "the enemy minority's" fight against it.

"The methods of these leaders almost wrecked our economic structure," he said, "and the issue now comes to this:

"Either they will take back their ancient, piratical privileges of doling out what they please of our resources and opportunities to our people, or our people will keep the method of that distribution in their own hands."

Denies Price Disruption.

Declaring that "the best we can do to balance burdens and benefits equitably so that the net result is good," Johnson took up, one by one, major objections to NRA.

As for the charge that NRA was raising too fast the prices of things the farmers buy, he said that except in a few isolated items, "no such thing has happened." Agriculture, Johnson insisted, can prosper only as industrial buying power is restored.

Complaints that NRA oppresses the "little fellow," Johnson said, are largely "alligator tears for the particular kind of 'little fellow' who wants to compete by sweating labor wages."

False Fears—And Hopes.

President Roosevelt's warning against arousing false fears, transmitted to the Chamber of Commerce convention, was not superfluous. Much injury to public morale can inadvertently be caused by criticism which, however justified, is so worded as to shake confidence in a program which has received inadequate trial.

But it is well to remember that at least equal harm can be caused by a suppression of the critical attitude in those who because of training or position are really competent to judge of the effects of experimental policies. Particularly is this true when such policies may—while there is still time—be readily altered to become constructive aids to recovery. The general disposition during the past year has perhaps been not to "cry wolf" enough, rather than the opposite.

And if it is inadvisable to arouse false fears it is at least equally inadvisable to arouse false hopes. This in the announcement of new policies, unduly ardent enthusiasts have more than once been disposed to do during the present Administration. It is, after all, the inevitable reaction from false hopes which is more likely than any other cause to prompt false fears.

Excluding The Libraries.

As the bill authorizing a PWA loan of $20,000,000 to the District was passed by the Senate and reported by the House District Committee it would provide nothing whatever for the development of branch libraries. Virtually all other urgent requirements of the District are specifically mentioned in the bill. It would make funds available for a tuberculosis hospital, a sewage disposal plant, the Municipal Center, for extension of Gallinger Hospital and Lorton Reformatory, for parks and playgrounds and public schools. Exclusion of branch libraries from this list is a glaring omission.

In making an appeal for library funds Dr. George F. Bowerman, District librarian, told Congressional committees that present facilities are sufficient to serve only about 38 per cent of the population. Washington has only four major branch libraries and five sub-branches. A detailed study of the situation by the library trustees in 1930 resulted in the adoption of a program calling for the construction of 28 branch libraries of varying sizes. Since then there has been an enormous increase in the number of registered library users and in the circulation of books. Existing libraries are overcrowded in spite of the fact that thousands of citizens, including large groups of school children, are virtually denied library service.

The Federation of Citizens Associations as well as Dr. Bowerman is aroused over this neglect of an essential phase of education. In reply to their appeal for amendment of the $20,000,000 loan bill the Commissioners have announced an intention to provide funds in the annual supply bills for additional libraries. An appropriation for the proposed Georgetown branch is included in the 1935 supply bill. When the District is required to repay the prospective loan at the rate of $1,000,000 or more per year, however, it may be difficult to secure additional funds for such projects. An amendment to avoid outright discrimination against our library system seems desirable.

Enactment of this bill, which now seems probable, will doubtless unloose upon the Commissioners an avalanche of petitions in behalf of numerous undertakings. Many such requests will have to be rejected. Many ought to be rejected. In public library facilities, however, Washington is already so backward as to emphasize the modesty of Dr. Bowerman's request. He merely seeks to prevent an advance decision against spending any PWA funds for overdue library development.

The Saar Plebiscite.

Next year, the industrially rich Saar Valley will decide, by popular vote, whether it is in future to be French or German, or whether it is to remain under the administration of the League of Nations. Because of the exceedingly acute feeling over this issue it is of the utmost importance that the League's preliminary arrangements for the conduct of the plebiscite should be above criticism. Both neutrality and expert knowledge seem guaranteed by Friday's announcement of the personnel of the committee which the League will put in charge.

Prof. Bindo Galli, president of the Court of Appeal at Genoa, who heads the committee, is one of the foremost jurists of Italy. Justice L. A. Nypel, of the Netherlands Supreme Court, ranks similarly in his country. And it is particularly interesting that the third member of the committee is not only an American, but an American so well known in America as an expert in such matters as Miss Sarah Wambaugh.

Miss Wambaugh has been a research fellow of Radcliffe since 1926, specializing in just such subjects as this upon which she has now to deal. Her Monograph on Plebiscites, published 14 years ago, still stands as authoritative, and she added difficult practical experience to profound theoretical knowledge when she served as expert adviser to the Peruvian government in the vexed Tacna-Arica plebiscite.

A Normal Executive Power.

Opponents of the reciprocal tariff bill have directed their attack largely against the alleged danger of giving dictatorial tariff-making powers to the President. There is little objection in principle to plans for expanding our foreign trade by bargaining for mutual tariff concessions. We have learned the elementary lesson that our exports are necessarily limited by the amount of goods we are willing to import. Most of us are also prepared to admit that some constructive action is needed to reverse the precipitate downward trend in international trade. It is not, however, so generally understood that the United States needs up-to-date Governmental machinery in order to hold its own in negotiating commercial agreements with other countries.

It is significant that both Henry L. Stimson, our former Secretary of State, and Dr. Wallace McClure, a treaty expert in that department, have lately emphasized present deficiencies of the machinery of negotiation in urging acceptance of the reciprocal tariff proposal. According to Mr. Stimson, we are "at a hopeless disadvantage" in bargaining with other nations. Dr. McClure is equally emphatic in asserting that our machinery for handling foreign trade problems is obsolete. In an address before the United States Chamber of Commerce he showed how essential it is to leave details of tariff-making to the discretion of the Executive. Furthermore, he pointed out that the present tariff bill merely goes one step forward in a progressive development of Executive tariff-making which began at least a half century ago.

Neither Mr. Stimson nor Dr. McClure displays the slightest alarm over the prospect of Executive usurpation of legislative tariff-making powers. Both are well aware that Congress is only being asked to surrender its control over general tariff policies, because negotiations requiring legislative approval at each step would be virtually doomed to failure. As a prominent American exporter said recently: "Bargaining with other countries can only be done by Executive action. * * * To make such treaty negotiations subject to the approval of Congress is as absurd as would be a corporation giving the sales manager and purchasing agent no authority to close any deal without referring same to a large board of directors."

Congress is further handicapped by the fact that its members represent particular States and districts and find it extremely difficult and often politically impossible to consider tariff issues from a National point of view. As Dr. McClure indicates, the Executive branch of the Government is theoretically in much better position to weigh the claims of special interests and particular sections against the welfare of all. The Senate amendment giving individuals and industries a right to be heard before any trade agreements affecting their status are concluded would seem to offer all necessary protection against hasty or ill-judged action on the part of the Executive.

Executive tariff making is, in short, merely a method of procedure tested by many nations and found to be essential to effective functioning of their machinery for establishing profitable commercial contacts with other countries. It does not impair essential legislative powers and it in no way surrenders the latent and underlying legislative control.

Hot Dog!

The man who made America hot-dog-conscious is dead and it is hereby suggested that some appropriate memorial be raised to this great contributor to American culture. Harry Mozely Stevens is credited with being the first to wrap the succulent sausage in a hot roll for the edification of baseball fans. That was in 1900 at the old Polo Grounds, in New York, whence this former puddler and book agent had come from Niles, Ohio. Since that time the hot dog has left a trail of picalilli and mustard smeared across the face of America and it is doubtful if there is a town in these States so small that the aroma of the toasting weenie assaults not the noses of its citizenry.

It is rather ironic that the originator of the hot dog should have been an Englishman by birth, especially after all the disdainful sniffs at this American institution that have been made in the pages of Punch. But lovers of Americana can find solace in the fact that it was T. A. Dorgan, beloved, left-handed genius of the drawing board and as American as only an Irish newspaper man can be, who gave the delicacy its immortal name. There was a time when polite people spurned the phrase, hot dog. They simpered to the stand, unable to resist the sizzling morsel, but they asked for a "hot frankfurter, if you please," instead of "one dog, with both." If memory serves there was once a campaign against the term, sponsored by the D. A. R., as something repugnant to good taste.

But the phrase lived on. It was stamped upon the American mind. Nothing could make the baseball fan, or the small boy with a nickel, ask for anything but a hot dog. It was after this campaign to frankfurtize the hot dog that the expression "Hot Dawg!" came into being. By 1925 the delicacy, by that name, was here to stay. The countryside sprouted hot dog stands, which became institutions as American as the little red school house, and which occasionally fell into bad repute when they sported signs reading, "Joe's Place: Hot Puppies."

Just what kind of memorial Mr. Stevens should be given it is difficult to say. We suggest, as a starter, a bronze plaque bearing a nickel, a flivver, and a hot dog couchant, over a background composed of a baseball score card a scene from Coney Island, and a filling station. Duplicates—not replicas—might then be made and placed in the public squares of every American village and town in memory of the man who did more to ruin the digestion of a nation than any man—except the inventor of the banana split.

Closing A Fiasco.

Bids for carrying mail have been awarded on 15 air transport lines. Most of the companies engaged in this business before Postmaster General Farley canceled their contracts will soon be flying the mail once more. They have undergone superficial reorganization, in accordance with the mandate from the chairman of the Democratic National Committee. But with the exception of insignificant changes in their names, and the absence of officials who conferred with a former Postmaster General at his request, they are the same companies. Only four concerns which held no contracts when the cancellation order was issued have become a part of the new air-mail system.

What has Mr. Farley accomplished by his precipitate action of February 9? He boldly claims to have eliminated graft and corruption from the air-mail system and to have reduced greatly the cost of this service to the Government. But he has not yet proved that the companies whose contracts he abrogated were guilty of illegal conduct. Mr. Farley's talk about the "old system" being "mainly built up through the granting of illegal contracts under one subterfuge or another to favored concerns" raises a question as to whether, even now, he understands the law which he was called upon to administer. That law did not contemplate repeated competitive bidding on established routes, but authorized the Postmaster General to substitute route certificates for contracts in dealing with carriers that had proved themselves to be competent and trustworthy. The best service is developed through continuous operation by responsible companies, and not by cut-throat competition, as the history of our railroads conclusively shows.

Mr. Farley has succeeded in ousting a few officials from their chosen business, without determining (except to his own satisfaction) whether they actually violated the law. He has lowered the standards of the air-mail service, and has awarded a bid to at least one company which is using discarded and obsolete equipment. In self-praise, Mr. Farley notes that "rates now being obtained by the Government as a result of open competitive bidding are substantially lower than those prevailing in the old system." In some instances lower rates are a result of specifications which permit the use of less modern equipment. In most cases, however, it appears that the former carriers made extremely low bids to retain their routes until they can obtain a square deal from Congress or a nonpartisan commission. Some of the carriers have made known that they will lose heavily on their temporary contracts.

Moreover, if economy had been the objective of the Administration it could have been achieved without all this witch-burning and window-dressing. As costs of operation were reduced, compensation allowed the air-mail companies was repeatedly cut by the former Postmaster General. Further reductions could have been effected without jeopardizing the entire air-mail system, causing the death of several pilots and creating an intolerable tangle. Since the original blunder was committed Mr. Farley has tried many face-saving maneuvers. But the air mail as an important institution has none the less lost ground which at best it will take months to recover. Such are the results when a professional politician is given a key position in what is emphatically called a "planned economy."

Murder Will Out.

It was bound to come. Since the New Deal spokesmen began to ring their changes upon the changers—of money—the international bankers have been everywhere found guilty of almost every current crime. Now, the contemporary calendar being exhausted, and a recalcitrant residue of bankers being still in business, appeal is made to history.

So Mr. Gerald G. McGeer tells a Canadian Parliamentary Committee that it was a plot of international bankers which resulted in the assassination of Abraham Lincoln. Historians are staggered by such nonsense, but what of that? The bankers will be lucky to escape with only the blood of Honest Abe upon their humid hands. If the worst were known—and it probably will be—Cain was the first international banker, and one of the last of the tribe, a fugitive in Scotland, has given rise to the legend of the Monster of Loch Ness.

Credit For Russia.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I wish to express my views on the projected American credit to the Soviet Republics as one who thinks and dreams of the future welfare of Russia. While I and all the patriotic Russians welcomed the United States' recognition of the U. S. S. R., we do not wish the United States to open any large credits to a regime which has not justified the reckless dictatorial policy that it has maintained so far. The Soviet Republics have been magnificent "housewreckers" of the old system, but their "architectural" methods have been terrible. The American people should know that the Russian people, as a whole, are treated by their government as feudal slaves and not as individual human beings, with reckless executions right and left.

I would advise President Roosevelt before he or his advisers take any definite steps in granting the credit to the Kremlin leaders to consult three veteran Russian revolutionists in this country, all fully informed of the terrible situation prevailing in their native land, who are neither monarchists nor Communists, but true sons of Russian revolution: Dr. M. J. Imchanitzky, the international lawyer, former jurisconsul of the U. S. Embassy in Moscow; Ivan Narodny, author and old friend of Lenin, and Ivan Okuntsoff, the founder of all the Russian newspapers in New York, former Siberian revolutionist and a veteran member of the American Russian colony. Only after consulting those three should the United States authorities act. They all live in New York, are citizens of the United States and will speak the truth.

If a credit is arranged for the Soviet regime, it should serve the good of the Russian people and not a small clique.

F. RIMSKY KORSAKOV.

Sparing the Rod.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Children today are ruling the American home and parents seem unable to control them and they have no respect for older people or for any authority. I have a young cousin, a boy of 10, who has developed into a "problem" child and strikes his mother and is impertinent to his teachers and refuses to study. It is because his mother does not believe in whipping children. She has the modern idea that children should be ruled by love alone. The boy knows he can do anything and get away with it, as his mother, instead of disciplining him, will sit down weakly and cry over his behavior.

Recently two physicians examined him and said he was far above the average mentally, and the trouble was not due to his mind but lack of proper home training and they told his mother all he needed was a good, old-fashioned thrashing. Solomon said: "Spare the rod and spoil the child" and it is no kindness to a child to let it grow up lawless and defiant of all authority. When a child of 10 can rule a home there is something wrong with the parents' training. Children go through a savage period and can not be reasoned with, and the reason we have adult criminals is because as children they did not have proper discipline. D. A. D.
Washington, April 29.

No Apology From Japan.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Japanese people, I am certain, have no apologies to offer the United States and other world powers for their determination to establish a sort of Monroe Doctrine in Asia. Ignorance of the history of Japan's relations with China is responsible for mistaking this doctrine as a threat in the Orient.

It is perhaps just as well that Japan's action is more drastic than circumstances warrant, for it may lead to study and understanding of the events that have impelled the Island Empire to declare itself the arbiter of the destinies of Asia.

In the long run the world will be convinced of the wisdom and fundamental distinterestedness of this course. The nations, I believe, will one day believe that Japan's action far more surely was calculated to promote peace and the welfare of all Oriental peoples than all the futile meddlings of the League of Nations.

TEDDY DE NOLASCO.
Washington.

History Repeating.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In the corner was a pile of old discarded books. With the superior feeling of a being living in this brain-trusting era, I carried several of the antiques down from their attic twilight thinking they might prove amusing. I thought that I would be refreshed by their outmoded ideas and ideals. Life must have been so different before Army officers carried the mail and Government and industry bowed to Roman-letter fraternities.

An argument written by a Frenchman before the American Civil War sounded almost as though it were copied from an editorial in last week's newspaper. Old Boss Tweed wasn't so puny compared with some of our present-day politicians. According to a description written by one of the ancients, our Ma Ferguson's pardon mill is small compared with the one run in Washington during reconstruction days.

In reading of how the victorious Federal eagle sent out loyal patriots to reconstruct and heal the country after the War of Secession and of how so many of these agents betrayed their trust I thought of another eagle and its present-day mission. I hope that our new model Maeterlinck Bluebird that sings "Happy Days," while it "cracks down" on heretics with its bundle of lightning rods and iron wheel, will do better. It is also to be hoped that the agents and correctors working for this present cause will not forget that the Blue Eagle is a bird of hope and not a greedy bird of prey.

A FLORIDA CRACKER,
Washington, May 3.

The Constitution.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The world's tension over America's NRA as to whether it shall be declared Constitutional or not is certainly unwarranted if consistency shall be the keynote of justice when the Supreme Court renders its decision.

The last half of clause 2 in section 1 of Article XIV of our Constitution says that, "nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction, the equal protection of the laws." Certainly our courts would be ultra-conservative and pro-interest were they to annul the NRA on the grounds of it impairing the freedom of contracts which is so interpreted from the above article. This article was drawn up more so for the conditions that prevailed during the reconstruction period of the South, which involved Negro suffrage, than for the purpose of protecting industry to the extent that it always has. Industry claims NRA illegal and confiscating and that it shall retard prosperity and deprive it of much needed revenue.

Our Constitution certainly conflicts within itself if it is to be interpreted constantly as being drawn up for business interests; as labor is seldom able to come any where near under the document's protection as industry is so able to do.

GUS SHINSKE.
Washington, April 24.

Both Sides Wrong.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Some argue that we have overpopulation. Our troubles and tribulations are caused by this, we are told. Others hold the opposite view. They want the gates opened for immigration. We need more consumers, is the contention. It should not be necessary to go into socio-economics to show that both views are "all wet." And common sense and a little meditation ought to be sufficient for finding out why we are so backward in this field of education. The answer to the economic picture is simple enough: produce what we need and consume what we produce. The few raw materials we must import can always be had in exchange for our splendid finished products. But a real and rationally planned production can not be had unless the producers organize into a gigantic industrial union, which will be the structure of industrial democratic administrative government, and institute production for use and collective ownership of the means of production and distribution.

S. HOGSETH.

An Indian's Plea.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I, David Buffalo Bear, a full-blooded Sioux Indian of Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, South Dakota, greatly deplore the passing of the Wheeler-Howard bill (Indian rights bill) H. R. 7902, causing Indians again to become wards of the Government, thereby taking away the independence and self-respect of the Indian, which is the only hope of their advancement and future citizenship that President Calvin Coolidge granted them. He gave all Indians the right to vote, which right they have fulfilled. I am sincerely interested in Indians being citizens under the State and county laws in the State in which they reside, working and living as the white man, and having an interest in life's achievements.

DAVID BUFFALO BEAR,
Ogalala Sioux.
Boston, Mass., May 2.

"When I Was a Boy."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In reading your interesting Sunday edition I became concerned in the first installment of a story, "When I Was a Boy," by an Old-Timer, and wish to add the hope that all who read it will be as much interested as I am sure to be.

M. W. BRAINARD.
Cambridge, Mass., May 1.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: We girls at school sure get a kick out of your Sunday story, "When I Was a Boy." Does the Old-Timer really mean that girls once wore red flannels next to their skin? Poor dears! How they must have suffered. What would they think of our Carioca panties?

"PEG" TURNER.

Literary Sub-Divisions.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have read with interest The Post-Impressionist's discussion of realism and romanticism in fiction, and it seems to me he might have gone even further than he did go. Why isn't realism a sub-division of romanticism? If the latter is seeing life as you choose to see it, nothing could be more that than the former. Both are the contrary of classicism—whatever classicism is. I suppose classicism is balance, sanity, the careful choosing of the significant. L. H.

The Style and the Man

Postoffice, Saturday.

ONE of the few privileges of this Column is the privilege of differing with its fellow-classics, the editorials. That is a privilege we love to exercise. Now we propose to exercise it upon a recent editorial entitled "Aristocracy in Letters."

Using only five paragraphs, "Aristocracy in Letters" disposed of the novelist's Duty to God and the novelist's Duty to his neighbor. After administering merited meed to the glacial perfection of "Ethan Frome," the editorial complained against: (a) the multiplicity of "aristocrats" among Mrs. Wharton's dramatis personae; (b) Mrs. Wharton's unsensational outlook upon an unsensational past; (c) anybody's romanticizing of our sensational present; (d) Henry James.

Our adversary maintains that the novelist's proper function is the interpretation of the world in which he lives. If we grant this, for argument's sake, won't our adversary admit that a few of the creatures he calls aristocrats still encumber the earth? Then why shouldn't they have their proportional place in the fictional sun?

Says he: The life that Mrs. Wharton knew "lacked the sensational elements of the present day." We won't pause to note that Mrs. Wharton's life began during the Civil War and has continued through the World War and the boom into the depression. We shall merely ask whether sensational and unsensational events aren't pretty evenly balanced in any day, and whether the novelist's problem is not the purely personal one of what he or she wants to observe.

"Romanticizing the spirit of our times?" The spirit of any epoch is romantic or realistic merely as are the people who live in it. If all of one epoch's readers read realism, then the spirit of their epoch is realistic. If all the readers of another epoch read romance, then the spirit of their epoch is romantic. But if a lot of readers of one epoch read realism while a lot of their contemporaries are reading romance, then the spirit of their age is both romantic and realistic.

And that is exactly what the spirit of our age is.

The editorial says Mrs. Wharton's reminiscences "make Henry James seem almost human." We should hope so!

In the first place, there is Mrs. Wharton's debt to James. Whatever you think of his final literary style, it did have tremendous influence. It submerged May Sinclair, touched even Jack London. It has lately diverted Joyce and Dos Passos—many authors who disliked James, many more who never read him. But of all these the style of none derives more directly from that of Henry James than does Edith Wharton's.

And, in the second place, we should hope that Mrs. Wharton would present James as at least "almost human"— for he was human. What is more human than the possession of a mannerism? Only one thing and that is the assiduous cultivation of a mannerism once you have acquired it. The truth is that Henry James was too human.

It is the general opinion that, at the beginning of his career, he wrote almost as clearly as did his psychologist brother, William. For proof, people who have not read them for a long while point to "Daisy Miller" and "The American." If you reread these today you will find there plentiful foreshadowings of those stylistic inversions which were to gain full flower in "The Sacred Font" and "The Ambassadors." Still, to the eye of comparison, the earlier pair is pellucid.

There soon arrived a day when America was divided into two contending schools: those who believed that James meant something, if you could only find it out—and those who believed he meant nothing. The figure of James did not diminish until a third and younger school arose which puzzled out what he meant and declared it unworthy of either concealment or search.

Ourselves, we do not go quite so far. James, we feel, did frequently mean something well worth while; did devise the only tones capable of quite interpreting those peculiar and significant phases of the late nineteenth century with which he specially dealt. And we are sure that "The Awkward Age" is a great comedy of manners; that "What Maisie Knew" is a devastating picture of its times.

Sainte-Beuve says somewhere that the peasant has style because he "writes as the grass grows." In this good sense, Grant's memoirs have an excellent style. But the style of any conscious artist is artificial. The only question involved is one for the William Jameses, not the Henrys: to wit, to what extent does the habit become an essential part of the habitue?

Well, Henry James' style eventually became Henry James himself.

During the last of his rare returns to America—so the story runs—timid Henry James was prevailed upon to lecture at Bryn Mawr and to sleep there in a building ordinarily occupied entirely by girl-students. They said he shut his eyes when he entered the main door and tried to keep them shut while running to the room-and-bath assigned him.

Early next morning, strange sounds issued therefrom. Excited students found frantic Mr. James gesticulating in a dressing-gown. This is how he explained the crisis:

"As you might, in the modern manner, put it, I only a moment since turned forward the hot-water tap, and slightly only. Yet the outpouring is of an incorrigibility, the steam lethal, the tap impenitently stuck!"

Carlisle Bargeron

WHEN one considers the naivete with which speakers at the United States Chamber of Commerce's annual meeting discussed the NRA it is difficult to understand how that body ever got the reputation of being hard-boiled and grasping. Really those gentlemen are as guileless as a new-born babe. A great injustice has been done to them by public opinion over the years. Instead of the cunning we expect to find in big business men, theirs is really an innocence that has not in the slightest been roughened by contact with the outside world.

BARGERON.

Now, no one of them gave unstinted approval to the NRA. Their treatment ranged from mild criticism, or criticism of some phases, to general denunciation. But did any one of them want to abolish it? Oh, no indeed. It must be touched up, revamped here and there, and improved, but the good points of it must be retained.

* * * *

Yes, sir, the good points must be retained. No people would be so foolhardy as to throw away the good points of anything, certainly not those so far advanced in civilization as we are. While various speakers listed various good points about the NRA that must be retained, the one good point that fascinated all of them, on the retention of which there was a unanimity of opinion, was the elimination of "cut-throat" competition." Ah, there is a term that has caught on in this country almost as well as "Yes, we have no bananas" of another era. As a nation, united and unafraid, we have come to take a definite stand against that—against "cut-throat competition."

* * * *

Ask any man in the street, or a man or woman anywhere, if he thinks we ought to have "cut-throat competition" and he will readily reply in the negative. Sometimes I wonder if the consumer isn't more deadly set against it, in fact, than business. This is, of course, a complete flop from our consumer attitude of a few years ago.

Yet it is not surprising. The term is right revolting, not "competition" by itself but with the horrendous adjective "cut-throat." That suggests a man, usually a lawless man, with a knife in hand jumping at another fellow's throat. It's a picture that we as a law-abiding people don't like to contemplate.

Inasmuch, however, as we have definitely set our faces against it, and must keep the NRA to see that we don't have it, I wonder if it wouldn't be a good idea to have some authority, probably the United States Chamber of Commerce, define just exactly what is meant. I am satisfied that it has come to have a meaning which the public never associated with it in the first instance.

One doesn't have to go back far to find its origin. I mean, its origin insofar as the general public is concerned. It developed with the advent of the present Administration. One of the most pernicious influences against prosperity, it was said, was the sweatshops that had sprung up rather generally during the depression, in which little girls and boys worked for a few cents a day making shirts that could be sold so cheaply as to undermine established concerns.

Somehow in the general revolt that followed the disclosure of these shops the thought seemed to be they were in some degree responsible for the depression instead of the depression being responsible for them. Some rather ingenious devices for making a living had to be resorted to in those days. However, they were conditions that should have been remedied.

* * * *

But the progress of the term "cut-throat competition," its evolution since that time would fill a book in the telling. So far has it wandered, in fact, that a restatement of its meaning now would undoubtedly open lots of eyes.

Which is to say that as I have seen it in practice under the NRA "cut-throat competition" now means little, if any, competition at all.

Auto Tag

Waynesboro Police, Gang Play Hide-and-Seek.

Waynesboro, Va., May 4 (Spl.)—A new game, "auto tag," was originated last night by two Waynesboro patrolmen and a group of motor thieves.

Receiving a message from Charlottesville police that a car stolen there was headed for this city, Officers J. F. Smith and Heywood Leake cruised out to head off the stolen machine and its occupants. This they succeeded in doing, and the car was abandoned near the Fairfax Hall School.

Upon returning to headquarters with the machine, they found that J. B. McGahey had just reported his car missing from in front of his home near the school. Setting out again the local officers chased the thieves until their newly acquired auto had to be abandoned because of lack of gas.

Back to headquarters they came with their second recovered car of the night to receive a report that the thieves had picked up a third machine, belonging to Thomas R. Campbell near the pot where the second one had been abandoned. This time the thieves were successful in escaping.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips.

THE PRINCE IS 40.

("The Prince of Wales has passed his fortieth birthday."—News item.)

But yesterday I felt as gay
And frisky as a lamb;
Life seemed a nonstop game to play
And age seemed but a sham.
But suddenly I pale and wince—
Time crashes o'er my brow—
The cables bear the news the Prince
Of Wales is 40 now!

The universe seemed very young
And life a merry song;
No inhibitions to me clung;
The span of youth was long;
But now my body seems to creak;
I'm aging, I'll allow;
I saw it in the news this week—
The Prince is 40 now!

This year of nineteen-thirty-four Seemed just like twenty-two;
Time hadn't taken toll or score—
The world was just like new.
I pranced around just like a calf
(My error; make it "cow");
But fetch my comforter and staff—
The Prince is 40 now!

I felt just like a sophomore,
A carefree, romping lad;
There seemed no limit to the store
Of energy I had;
The flight of time was bunk and bosh,
I thought, but doctor, page
The old men's home, for David, gosh!
Is 40 years of age!

Oh, Prince, say that it isn't so—
Say that it can not be;
Proclaim it high, proclaim it low,
Proclaim it by decree!
Oh, David, say it's all a joke
To crush the hearts of men,
For if you're 40 I'm a bloke
Who's ninety-four, plus ten.

Deny it on the radio,
Deny it through the press,
Oh, tell us, Prince, it isn't so
And end our deep distress!
The frost is on the pumpkin, aye,
The blight is on the bough
For us, Prince, if you don't deny
That you are 40 now!

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE IN WASHINGTON.

We praise the New Deal, yes we do—
It helped us save our shirts;
We cheer Old Dr. Roosevelt, too—
But golly how it hurts!

Capital and labor, says Gen. Johnson, belong together like man and wife. From the constant uproar and uninterrupted turmoil, we should say the comparison is perfect.

That streamline train hit an automobile in Ontario the other day. The occupant, a farmer who had not even heard of the train, is reported to have established a new high for the movement and remarked as he came down from the stratosphere, "Fast, ain't she?"

Another Letter From a Dad to His Red-Headed Daughter

My Dear Louise: Your generation credits itself with many inventions, but I assure you there is nothing new under the sun—or the moon.

When I was your age, youngsters in high school went a-courting as they do now, and the only difference in their technique was the name.

"Necking" was called "messing," which was more exact, and "dating" was called "spooning."

Then, as now, there were sensible, unaffected, forthright girls whom everybody respected and liked, and a minor group composed of showy, play-acting, rather brazen girls called "flirts."

As I remember them, these rarer creatures were usually vainer and prettier than their more sedate rivals. Certainly they adorned themselves more lavishly and attracted much more attention.

But they did not marry so early or so well, and a few were still waiting for the right man when they moved away from our community.

Why were they less successful than girls with poorer equipment? Well, they were skilled campaigners, but they made one fatal blunder in tactics.

To express it with the Elizabethan frankness of that period, they were awful liars.

The game of love hasn't changed, any more than human nature has; and I have been told, by those who should know, that some carelessness in handling the truth is still considered excusable in dealing with the other sex.

Maybe so. And maybe I am an old fogy. But fair play is fair play, whether the fighters are men or dogs; and honor is honor and a liar is a liar, regardless of sex or anything else.

As you despise a boy when you find his stories are all untrue and his word wholly worthless, so boys worth their salt despise a girl, regardless of her charms, when they discover that she has no regard for truth.

They may "date" a pretty girl despite her lying, but they want something dependable when they choose a life companion. Love,

DAD.

William Lyon Phelps

Daily Talk About Books and Authors.

Behavior for Boys.

Perhaps no one is better qualified to write a book on etiquette for boys than the headmaster of a great school, and Dr. William O. Stevens, the head of the Cranbrook School for Boys, situated near Detroit, has produced an excellent little book called "The Correct Thing," which is accurately described on the title page as "A Guide Book of Etiquette for Young Men."

In the competition of modern life, good manners and ease of approach are essential in all so-called civilized communities; and they save those who possess these qualities from much needless agony. Dr. Stevens begins his book by saying that a young man with a good record in both scholarship and athletics got a good job as tutor to a rich man's son in Chicago. But though accepted by mail, when he called at the house and the boy's mother came into the room, he did not rise from his chair. She regarded him steadily for some moments; he bore this scrutiny with courage and steady endurance, but still remained in his chair. He lost the job.

In this age of informality, when many are afraid to use good grammar—in order to avoid giving the impression of a highbrow—it is well to remember that good manners are really founded on the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians. There is, furthermore, nothing inconsistent in a decent appearance and masculinity. Young men who are really virile do not have to advertise the fact by uncouthness or vulgarity. They do not even have to insist upon it by bad language, like so many of our American novelists.

Chapters are devoted to appearance and dress, how to behave in golf and other sports, in the drawing room, writing letters, driving automobiles, applying for a job, calls, making a speech, &c.

In addition to general principles, the book is remarkable for its definiteness. Not only boys, but men, might profit from reading the specific directions for an after-dinner speech.

It took courage to write this book, but if his experience had not shown him the need of it, I am sure Dr. Stevens would not have written it.

Dinner Concludes Women's Conclave

Chairman's NRA Prediction Arouses Comment.

Norfolk, Va., May 4 (Spl.).—A dinner for club presidents at the Chamberlain Hotel tonight ended the twenty-seventh annual convention of the State Federation of Women's Clubs which has been in session at Newport News since Wednesday.

Members of the Hampton, Newport News, Phoebus and Hilton Village clubs were hostesses.

At a morning session today routine business was transacted. There was much comment among the delegates today on the speech made last night by Mrs. Laura W. McMullen, chairman of International Relations of the National Federation. She predicted that if NRA fails, the President will have to swing back to the "right," where the value of property is considered ahead of the value of humanity.

No End of Books

By
Theodore Hall

AMERICA, any visiting British lecturer will tell us, is the land of bustle, of swift and decisive movement. And we all know that the East, Near and Far, operates under a polite and formal code of delayed and deliberate action.

But I ask you to compare the average passage of a bill through Congress with a certain two days in 1923 in Turkey, related by Gen. Charles H. Sherrill in "A Year's Embassy to Mustafa Kemal" (Scribner, $3). A Prime Minister, close to both the Sultan and the rising political power around Kemal, had resigned with his cabinet. How should they be replaced? Throughout the night of October 28, Kemal and his friends considered the matter carefully.

THEO. HALL.

The following morning the People's Party held a meeting for the same purpose, of which nothing came. At 2 p. m. the party reconvened. Kemal rose to his feet, but instead of suggesting a list of cabinet possibilities, he proposed that "the party recommend to the Grand National Assembly a law proclaiming Turkey a republic, with a president elected by the Assembly." Further, that president should name his cabinet. The party voted approval at once.

At 6 p. m. on the same day the Grand National Assembly met, discussed this revolutionary measure, handed it to a committee, and took a recess—for one hour. At the end of that time the committee reported favorably. Then the law was given its second and third reading, and was passed at 8:30 p. m. Fifteen minutes afterward, Kemal was elected the first President of the new Turkish Republic. How is that for action?

* * * *

But such directness and speed are entirely typical of Gazi Mustafa Kemal, the 53-year-old national hero and one-man founder of modern Turkey. Gen. Sherrill, who was American Ambassador at Ankara in 1932-33, tells the Gazi's story, and reports many interviews, "none under two hours long." Kemal as the hero of the Dardanelles defense, Kemal cashiered to the eastern provinces to get him out of the way, Kemal's westward march while gathering the national spirit about him—the tale leads straight to the eleven astonishing revolutions which the Gazi has made in Turkey.

The first of these is the one narrated above. Then, in quick succession, came the suppression of the Caliphate, the abolition of the fez, the change from the Turkish to the European calendar, the new civil, penal and commercial codes, the abandonment of the old Turkish numerals, the change from Arabic script to Latin letters, the translation of the Koran into Turkish (as well as the muezzin's call to prayer), the clear establishment of the Turkish tradition in history, the limitation of the opium trade, and the definite policy of friendly relations with Turkey's neighbors.

Gen. Sherrill recounts all this in clear and pleasantly written chapters. A feature of the book, which readers will pore over, is the series of drawings with colored pencils done by the Gazi's own hand. In them, Kemal gives the plans of several of his most important battles. Another shows exactly where Kemal and the Sultan sat during an interview at which it was decided to move the capital inland to Ankara—the point of the sketch being that the Sultan could see from his palace window the Allied fleets in the Bosphorus.

There is a good deal more in the volume than praise of Mustafa Kemal. Gen. Sherrill gives descriptions of Istanbul and Ankara (which has an avenue much like Massachusetts avenue), touches briefly on diplomatic scenes. An appendix furnishes a discriminating guide to the palaces, mosques, aqueducts, fountains and walls of Stamboul.

For diplomacy by no means covers Gen. Sherrill's range of interests—he is almost better known for his series of "Stained Glass Tours" in Germany, Spain and Flanders, Italy, England, and France. I feel he is at his happiest in this book when he is describing the "Glorious Nine," the marvelous colored windows in the mosque of Suleyman the Magnificent.

Helen MacKnight Doyle, M. D., better known on the West Coast as "Dr. Nellie," grew up in New York State in the seventies and followed her gold-miner father to the California camps. In the Bohemian San Francisco of the Gay Nineties, she braved all ridicule and studied medicine. What's more, she practiced it. In "A Child Went Forth" (Gotham House, $2.50) she tells with rare simplicity and unaffected charm the story of her life. I think it one of the best of lives in one of the best of times in one of the best of places.

"The Theory of Wages," by Paul H. Douglas. (Macmillan, $5). An incredibly monumental study which won the Hart, Schaffner and Marx international prize in 1927, by a professor of economics in the University of Chicago. George's classic work, written in 1883, which is so prophetic of our times that John Dewey said: "Every word of 'Social Problems' applies to our present condition, only in more intense degree." It is one of the very few books on modern society which really deserve reading.

Boy, 17, Wins Silver Spurs In Horse Show

High Honor Is Awarded Julian M. Marshall at Stuyvesant.

By Marian May.

Warrenton, Va., May 4.—Excellent horsemanship and keen enthusiasm held sway today as the boys of Stuyvesant School brought a team of hard riding and fox hunting to a climax with their ninth annual horse show.

Julian M. Marshall, of The Plains, Va., won the horsemanship feature, the annual awarding of the silver spurs. The high honor was given the 17-year-old lad after he had displayed remarkable hands and seat while riding Alex H. Calvert's chestnut mare, Sun Di, in the ring and over on outside course of six natural obstacles. Also considered were his general knowledge of horses, and the care of his horse, courtesy in the hunting field, and consistent interest in riding throughout the school term. The handsome spurs, hotly contested every year by Stuyvesant boys, are presented by Mr. and Mrs. George Sloan.

Horsemanship Fine.

The horsemanship of the Stuyvesant boys, who hunt regularly with the Warrenton pack and to whom equestrian sports constitute an important part of school life, was consistently fine throughout the show, and their performances were outstanding even when pitted against adult riders with many more years of experience.

The polo pony class, new this year, drew interesting entries from the Fauquier, Loudoun and Stuyvesant teams, with Howard C. Fair and R. J. Kirkpatrick leading the list of entries. Judged on a special course for handiness, pace and conformation, Miss Convey, owned by Howard C. Fair, was best in the open class. Mr. Fair also received first place in the green pony class with his handy steed, Spottswood.

The show committee was composed of Luther L. Tucker, president; Alex H. Calvert, vice president; Braxton S. Thompson, secretary, and W. Stanley Stokes, treasurer. Directors were E. B. King, Howard C. Fair, E. B. Hall and George Sloane.

The Stuyvesant School Horse Show is one of the few shows in the country managed entirely by schoolboys, and the Stuyvesant pupils displayed a thorough knowledge of horse shows in the well-balanced, fast-moving show they presented.

Mount Olivet and Today

Story of Triumphal Entry of Christ Into Jerusalem Fraught With Present-Day Implications; Hill Drama Retold.

By William T. Ellis.

When the kaiser entered Jerusalem he bestrode a white horse and had the Jaffa Gate enlarged to make way for his spectacular pageant. But when Jesus rode into Jerusalem as king He sat on a lowly ass and arrived by the eastern gate, from the Mount of Olives. Only He understood the loftiness of lowliness. Julius Caesar once entered Rome in a chariot drawn by 40 elephants. Mark Antony had lions for steeds. They could not imagine the might of meekness, which this Teacher-King from Nazareth taught.

Nevertheless, it was a triumphal entry that Jesus made. And hundreds of millions of persons still celebrate it yearly as Palm Sunday. Jesus accepted and asserted His kingly right and role. He knew full well that Calvary lay just ahead. But He would not be denied His hour of accepted sovereignty. The hosannas of the multitude, the waving palm branches, the spread cloaks, the jostling, leaping, excited crowds, expressing their acclaim in devious ways, were all received as His right, and they were sweet to Him.

Pity the soul which knows its Gethsemanes and Golgothas, but never experiences a time of triumph. There is need in every life for high hours of ecstacy and emotion. The thrill of self-realization at its best is every mortal's due. God never intended human existence to be a drab and unrelieved stretch of endurance. Happiness, recognition and power are an essential part of everybody's inheritance. It is a misguided puritanism which shrinks from them.

The Hill That Looks Two Ways.

Most of us are hazy in our geography. The strangely stupid and mixed reports which the press associations first sent out of the alleged discovery of the Queen of Sheba's capital were typical of this modern weakness. Few Christians have any clear conception of Bible Lands. The location and nature of the Mount of Olives are only dimly in most minds.

Olivet was the stage of some of the most dramatic experiences in the life of Jesus. On its Southeastern shoulder, in the Town of Bethany, He made His home when visiting Jerusalem. There many great events in the Gospel story were enacted. On the Mount of Olives He wept over Jerusalem. There He agonized in the Garden. And there was staged the Triumphal Entry. Olivet was the hill of tears, but also the hill of triumph.

Olivet looks two ways. It is only slightly higher than Jerusalem itself, from which it is divided by a deep valley, through which the brook, Kedron, runs. A man standing on the wall of Jerusalem and calling may be heard by persons on the slope of Olivet. The hill does overlook the city; and from its height Jesus often brooded over Jerusalem, and looked down the valley toward the hills of Bethlehem and the grim mountains and wilderness of Judea. The Mount of Olives also looks to the East, where the Jordan Valley lies like a green ribbon, and the Dead Sea shimmers in the sunlight, and the misty mountains of Moab rise beyond. The outlook from Olivet was like the panorama of our Lord's life: From the Field of the Shepherds, the wilderness of the temptation, and the scenes of His healings and teachings to the Holy City itself, with ghastly Calvary rising just outside the walls. It was a rare stage on which the drama of the Transfiguration began.

By Prearrangement.

Jesus did not stumble upon the Triumphant Entry by accident. To think so is to rob the occasion of most of its significance. It was by foresight and prearrangement that He met the Passover multitude and received its plaudits to His kingship. The incident of the ass and colt, which were awaiting His messengers, like the circumstances of finding the Upper Room, indicates forethought and preparation. Deliberately and definitely, Jesus made ready to be acknowledged as King David's royal Son.

This dramatic assertion of His sovereignty should be given full weight. The ovation was Christ's kingly right, and He wanted all the world to know it. Even self-engrossed Jerusalem must understand that it was no common man they were soon to lead forth to death, but the Fulfiller of the most sacred prophecies. Let not the Saviourhood of Christ obscure His kingly claims. As fully and as clearly as possible, He made evident His right to royal honors. When scandalized Pharisees asked Jesus to rebuke the popular demonstration, to still the hosannas and silence the shouts of His royalty He declared that if these were quiet the very stones would cry out the character of the King who, riding on a lowly ass' colt, accepted as His due the tribute of the masses.

Has Democracy Clear Eyes?

Many reasons flowed together to create this tumult of recognition of the Christ—the raising of Lazarus; the recent miracles in Jericho; the teachings and healings in the towns of Galilee; the championship of the poor; the presentation of the dream of the kingdom that was to come. All of the Master's past conspired to create this present hour. His name had filled the mouths of the populace, and His presence at the Feast was their opportunity to express their verdict upon Him.

The triumphal entry was a demonstration and decree of democracy.

It is of immense concern to all of us to realize that the insight of the people as a whole is usually clearer and truer than the sophisticated opinions of any officialdom. That truth is the basis of our form of government; and it is our bulwark against any dictatorship. There is something tremendously impressive about the act of the voice of the people in expression. All of us recall the delirious outbursts on November 11, 1918, which marked the end of the war. Some of use saw Europe's popular hysteria (profoundly right in its judgment) over President Wilson's arrival. I have seen the same mood in Egypt's demonstration over what it thought was the granting of independence; and in Turkey's emotional celebration of its Independence Day. Somehow, the common mind is quick to be stirred by a great and portentous reality. It was the voice of the people that hailed Jesus as king that day when He rode meekly and majestically down the western slope of Olivet into the city of His royal forbears, the acclaims following Him clear into the sacred precincts of the temple.

The Sovereign's Right to Rule.

In the courts of His Father's house Jesus vindicated His sovereignty by driving out the moneychangers and the merchants. Reform must always begin at the house of God. If religion is corrupt or incompetent at the center of its organization and administration, then nothing else can be right. Some day—soon, I believe—the world will awaken to the basic truth that the spring of all needed reform and recovery lies in religion.

Obviously, the central lesson of this lesson lies in the truth of the sovereignty of the Savior. Not Communism nor Fascism is our way out, but the accepted sway of the King whose right it is to rule. We are dealing only with the surface expressions of the troubles of our time until we realize that nothing but the recognized rule of Jesus Christ over the hearts of people can make right all that is wrong.

French Embassy Officials Entertain at Gay Dance

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

The Curtis Club at 1925 F street presented a gay scene Thursday evening when the Counselor of the French Embassy, Mr. Jules Henry, entertained at a large dinner preceding the dance which he and the Second Secretary of Embassy, Mr. Claude de Boisanger, and the Attache of Embassy and Countess de Leusse gave at the club.

Mr. Henry's dinner was given in honor of the retiring Ambassador of Spain and Senora de Cardenas. The guests included members of the Diplomatic Corps and smart Capital society. The club was brilliantly lighted by crystal chandeliers, and after the dinner the guests adjourned to the numerous salons, where some played bridge until the additional guests began to arrive for the dance. The garden of the club, with its tiled dance floor, is an ideal dancing place, but inclement weather forced all but the hardiest members of the party Thursday to stay indoors.

The younger set enjoyed the dancing while the elder guests enjoyed the excellent buffet and bar. The official guests lingered until after midnight, when most of them left the party to the younger guests.

Mme. de Laboulaye Attends.

Mme. de Laboulaye, wife of the French Ambassador, was there wearing a gown of slate blue crepe vastly becoming to her gray hair, and Mme. de Lima e Silva was in a gown of gold taffeta. With Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Mott Gunther, she sat in one of the drawing rooms.

The Ambassador of Brazil and Mme. de Lima had attended the dinner given in their honor by the Ambassador of Japan and Mme. Saito, and since they are being feted every night until their departure for Europe May 18, did not remain long at the ball. Mrs. Gunther wore a gown of printed crepe in shades of blue on a white background.

Mrs. Charlotte Naste, who is making her home in Washington this winter while studying for the Foreign Service, was one of the belles of the evening. She wore a gown of crepe, printed with a paisley pattern, fashioned with a draped bustle and train. Mrs. Naste is one of the most interesting members of the younger set, and quite beautiful. Mrs. Campbell Pritchett and her niece, Miss Natalie Keeney, as usual came in for a large share of popularity. The former was charming in a gown of white crepe with epaulets of white feathers, and Miss Keeney wore a frock of crisp brown organdie.

Mrs. Francis A. Whitten, who had entertained a small group at dinner in her Massachusetts avenue home before the dance, wore a gown of severe black with a deep decolletage and a shoulder cape of soft white ostrich. Mrs. Truxtun Beale, wearing a gown of flame-colored crepe, arrived rather early from the dinner party which she and Mr. Beale had given for their niece, Miss Catrina Beale, in the old Beale home.

Petite Countess de Leusse, who was hostess of the evening, wore a frock of white crepe with a sash of pale chartreuse and a cluster of flowers of the same shade on the shoulder. Senora de Cardenas, who was in a gown of pale blue satin, spent most of the evening playing bridge, but the Ambassador was in constant circulation among the guests, sometimes dancing, sometimes chatting with friends, who can not yet reconcile themselves to the imminent departure of the De Cardenas for Paris.

Lady Elizabeth Lindsay, who recently arrived from England to visit her uncle and aunt, the Ambassador of Great Britain and Lady Lindsay, was one of the popular persons of the evening. She wore a gown of blue and white printed crepe, with a jacket of dark blue, and was busy greeting the many friends she had made during her visit in this country a year ago. Mrs. C. Mathews Dick was lovely in a white gown with a train and brief cape of silk fringe. Mrs. Chester A. Snow, jr., always a favorite at dances, wore a gown of white lace, and Mrs. McKeldin Tucker was in a handsome gown of black crepe trimmed with a single white flower.

Bachelor Guests.

The bachelor contingent of the party included Mr. Pendleton Turner, the Military Attache of the Italian Embassy, Col. Marco Pennaroli; the "three bachelor secretaries," as they are now called, Migone, Tommasi and Ferrera, of the Italian Embassy; Mr. Henry May, Mr. Frederick Hibbard, Mr. Harry Villard, Mr. Ralph Hill, Lieut. Frederick Coleman, Mr. George Merrill, and Mr. Robert C. Kelley. The entire group of younger secretaries from the various embassies and legations were present, as no dancing party is complete without them, and last evening's party was certainly complete.

The Counselor of the Swedish Legation and Baroness Beck-Friis stayed until the end of the party with their daughter, Miss Christine Beck-Friis, who, though really a subdebutante, is one of the popular members of the debutante set. She wore a gown of white satin fashioned with a long, flowing skirt, and was constantly on the dance floor.

Mrs. Lewis T. Preston was lovely in a gown of shining white satin, made on simple lines, and seemed unperturbed by the recent publicity given to rumors that she plans soon to go to Reno. As Eppes Hawes, daughter of former Senator and Mrs. Harry B. Hawes, she was one of the outstanding debutantes of several years ago. Her wedding took place in the house in which the party was given Thursday. Mrs. James F. Curtis, at whose home the ceremony took place, since has converted her "big house" into the smart club.

Sweet Briar Exalts Queen Of May Today

Three Washington Girls Are Members of College Festival Court.

Miss Elizabeth Ogilby, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. F. R. Ogilby, of Chevy Chase, Md.; Miss Eleanor Rust, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Warwick Rust, of Fairfax, Va., and Miss Kathleen Spiller, daughter of Mrs. George S. Holmes, of Washington, are members of the May Queen's Court in the twenty-eighth annual May Day festival to be held today by the students of Sweet Briar (Va.) College.

The days of "Good Queen Bess" will be reenacted on the college campus in an Elizabethan masque for the entertainment of a queen and court dressed in elaborate Elizabethan costumes.

Miss Lydia Harris Goodwyn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred L. Goodwyn, of Richmond, Va., is to be Queen of the May. The masque, "The Arraignment of Paris," written by George Peele and originally presented before Queen Elizabeth of England in the sixteenth century, is to be staged in the East Dell, a woodland amphitheater on the campus. The college's annual Horse Show will take place this morning, and the May Day Dance, one of Sweet Briar's two formal dances of the year, will be given at 4 p. m. tonight in the gymnasium.

The court procession will move down the East Dell slope toward the Queen's dais at 3:15 p. m. Heralds in white satin slashed with coral satin; the ladies of the court walking two by two, three honor attendants and last the May Queen will compose the procession.

Miss Goodwyn will wear a costume of white brocaded satin, with the tight bodice, puffed sleeves and very full skirt of the Elizabethan period. The square neckline is edged with a high, standing collar of lace, and the long court train, which hangs from the shoulders, is of white satin spangled in silver sequins. She will carry an arm bouquet of lilies-of-the-valley, souvenir roses and gardenias. Her crown is of lilies-of-the-valley, her garland is of daisies, babies' breath, sweet alyssum and forget-me-nots, and her scepter is decorated with the same flowers.

The ladies of the court will wear Elizabethan costumes of taffeta in pastel shades of blue, green, yellow, pink, orchid and peah, and they will carry bouquets of varicolored flowers, including sweet peas, roses, sweet alyssum, forget-me-nots and gardenias.

The large cast for the masque was chosen from among students prominent in college dramatics. The production is directed by Cameron King, of the Sweet Briar English faculty. Music for the songs in the masque was composed by Ernest R. Zochiel, of the music department. Prof. Albert A. Finch is the musical director.

A May Court figure, led by the May Queen with her father, Mr. Wilfred L. Goodwyn, will feature the May Day dance this evening. The ladies of the court will wear dainty spring frocks of mousseline de soie over taffeta, with draped necklines and wide berthas edged with ruching. The queen will wear a white crepe evening gown, simple in design, with high neckline in front and low draped back, the skirt forming a self train.

Children Need Independence, Says Kindergarten Director

Clothes Are Important in Developing This; Should Have Simple Fastenings So the Child Can Dress Himself; Should Be Attractive to Give Him Confidence.

THE MOST IMPORTANT asset a small child can have is a feeling of independence but also of security.

Miss Adelia Boynton, director of the nursery school and kindergarten at the National Child Research Center, stressed this in her address to a group of mothers and children at the Hecht Co. yesterday afternoon. Miss Boynton declared clothes play an important part in helping a child develop independence.

Serve Double Purpose.

"A small child's clothes should serve a twofold purpose," she said. "They should be attractive in appearance to give him confidence, and they should have simple fastenings so he may learn to dress himself at the earliest possible age.

"A child who can dress himself has a feeling of independence. He also has that sense of security necessary for his mental health," Miss Boynton said. Clothing should also be loose and comfortable, and a child should be dressed in the prevailing fashion so he will not form an inferiority complex, she added.

"In 'setting the stage' so a child can learn to do things for himself, parents must learn it is wrong to make things too difficult for the young child," she continued.

"His toys should be on low shelves

so he can take them out and put them away himself; his towels and wash rags should be hung so he can reach them and not have to ask for them. This way even infants can form the habit of independence."

Miss Boynton then explained that a child's holding a spoon while eating, even if some one else had to guide it, taught him to do things for himself.

Talking Helps.

"Much can be done with the very young child by talking to him about the things you do when you dress him," she said. "If you dress a child in a hurry and don't tell him anything about what you are doing it will take him a long time to learn. Whereas, if you say, now let's put this leg in, now the other, now I'll fasten one button, and you fasten the other, the child becomes interested. He wants to do those things himself, and he soon learns how."

Many parents fail to help their children form the habit of independence because they do not understand how to give the child this opportunity to cooperate," Miss Boynton declared.

"It is only by doing that a child learns," she concluded, "and he learns best when his parents let him cooperate with them."

Keeping Posted

Expert Square Dancers.

THE SQUARE-DANCING group, following the rules Henry Ford published and that the Gerrit Millers have made popular in Washington this season, will have their grand finale at the National Woman's Country Club tonight.

• • • •

The couple that deserves the blue ribbon for prograss this year is Dr. and Mrs. H. C. Bryant. The tall, likeable head of the educational work for the National Park Service, and his dimpling, curly-haired wife had never danced a step of any kind 'till the Millers interested them in square dances. Both Dr. and Mrs. Bryant were brought up in homes where dancing was frowned upon.

• • • •

Now, they not only do square dances with accurate precision—without which this kind of dancing is a jumbled maze of complicated gestures—they also waltz, two-step and fox-trot with the best of the couples who grew up in dancing schools and tea-dance restaurants. The only dance they've not attempted to date is the carioca.

Concert to Be Given On Alexandria Organ

Visitors to Alexandria in "The Tour of Historic Homes" this afternoon are invited to attend the concert.

Wives Shouldn't Mix in Their Husbands' Careers, Contends Mrs. William H. King Over the Radio

They Have Enough to Do To Run Own Jobs, She Says.

Maintains They're Apt to Do More Harm Than Anything.

To afford a National audience of radio listeners closer contact with women identified with the legislative destinies of America is the purpose of The Washington Post's "First Ladies of the Capital" series, broadcast twice weekly over an N. B. C. network.

By Margaret Santry.
(The Radio Reporter).

THE modern wife has more than enough to do to run her own job well, without mixing into her husband's business affairs, is the contention of Mrs. William H. King.

The charming and gracious wife of the Senator from Utah made her debut over the radio from Station WMAL in The Washington Post's "First Ladies of the Capital" interview series yesterday. She was heard in a National Broadcasting Co. network from coast to coast.

Speaking from the standpoint of the wife of a man in public life, she maintained that keeping up the kind of social program that makes for interesting contact with her husband's associates is the most important job she can tackle. This gives her scope for developing tact, intelligence and the ability to get on with people—all essentials for a successful public career.

Mrs. King: "It is my opinion that a wife, who interferes in her husband's career, can often do more harm than good. My interest is my home and family, and discharging those social duties that are necessary to my husband's career in public life. I find that to do these well takes up all my time and energies. Being a homebody might be an old-fashioned idea—but its just as important as it ever was. My husband works very hard and when he comes home, he doesn't want to talk shop. He wants to relax and enjoy his family."

Citing the example of one man whose wife campaigned for him, she remarked that his helpers complained if they could only get her to stop making speeches they might get the man elected.

Not Necessary.

Mrs. King—"I don't think a wife needs to stump for her husband. I think there are other ways in which she can be more helpful. I have accompanied my husband in some of his campaigns in Utah—as has Mrs. Dern when the Secretary of War was then Governor of Utah. We contributed our part by holding receptions and teas wherever we campaigned in the State. In this way people had an opportunity to meet us, know what we stood for and find out what we were like, and I think it had just as much value as any public demonstrations we might have made."

OFTEN too emotional to make good politicians, wives can best serve their husbands' public careers through developing and exercising the social graces of tact, intelligence and hospitality, thinks Mrs. William H. King, wife of the Senator from Utah.

Miss Santry—"As one who has been so close to official life, do you think women are temperamentally suited to politics?"

Mrs. King—"I think women are often too emotional to make good politicians, and they certainly can do more harm than good in a sphere they have not prepared themselves for. After all, men have been making a lifelong study of these things, and while I realize there are some women who are making a fine contribution to public affairs, I think the average woman is not as temperamentally and physically endowed for the strain of public life. Not that all women shouldn't take some interest in politics and be alert to the different issues and conditions that concern us."

Many, Many Calls.

To those who might question the demands a Senate lady's duties make upon her time, here are a few things she must do on her arrival in Washington.

Mrs. King—"Within two weeks the Senator's wife must make her call at the White House, call upon the wife of the Vice President and of the Speaker of the House. Then she must call on the wife of the senior Senator from her own State, and the wives of all Senators who have been longer in office than her husband. She must also call first on the wife of the Secretary of State, who heads the Cabinet; the other Cabinet wives must call on her first. The Senator's wife must also call upon the wives of all foreign Ambassadors first, while foreign Ministers' wives call upon her first."

These are only a few things to remember in the busy social routine. Regarding the return of invitations she has accepted during the season, Mrs. King revealed for her listeners:

Mrs. King: "While it's a large order—it's an unwritten law to return all invitations you have accepted. Incidentally, no matter how many weeks ahead you are invited, it is important to accept or regret an invitation within 24 hours. It is obvious what a convenience this is for a hostess. Of course, as you know, an invitation to the White House is a command, and for that you forego any other invitation you may happen to have for the same date. It is quite socially correct to explain you have been invited to the White House, as hostesses realize there is no excuse for regretting a White House invitation except for serious illness."

The Senate Ladies Luncheon each Tuesday is another item. They were begun during the war in order Senate ladies might get together and sew for the Red Cross, and still are held religiously.

Work His Recreation.

"It seems to me he has made work his joy, his recreation and hobby. And I've never seen anyone with such energy and capacity for it as my husband."

Woman Fights for Long Ouster; Not Discouraged

By Helen Fetter Cook.

FOR MORE THAN A YEAR prominent women of New Orleans have worked diligently to obtain funds to pay their counsel in the investigation against Senators John H. Overton and Huey Long. This inquiry has received new impetus the last few days, according to Mrs. Hilda Phelps Hammond, who is in town for the seventh time since April, 1933, in connection with these hearings.

"We're going to keep it up," said Mrs. Hammond yesterday, "until the Senate of the United States has investigated thoroughly and fully all evidence we have to show that Overton and Huey Long should not be sitting in the Senate of this American Republic."

Mrs. Hammond admitted, for the first time in more than 12 months, she was "fighting mad" after Senator Overton's attack an Gen. Ansell—the chief counsel for the investigating committee—Thursday morning.

Heretofore, this tall, dark-eyed, patrician-looking woman has avoided talking about herself. She explained yesterday the motives that prompted her entry into the long-drawn-out battle with the Louisiana Senators.

"We Southern women don't go in much for 'causes' and 'movements,'" she said. "Before I realized how very important this Senate investigation was, I was just a regular member of society. I was graduated from Newcomb College, and later won my M. A. I have written some articles which have been published in National magazines but my career was the running of my home and the rearing of my four children."

New to Politics.

"I was never in politics before," she added, "but when we women saw Senator Howell insulted by Mr. Long with that 12-day evidence showing how Seymour Weiss assailed the United States Senate, and then in February found Mr. Overton seated in the Senate in the face of it all, with Weiss unrebuked, we felt it was about time we began some investigating.

"Though we started as a drawing-room council of 29 members, our ranks have increased to more than 2,000 in Louisiana with 2,500 key women in other States.

"We are not just a group of society women, though the idea was first sponsored and organized by women who are social leaders, many of them former Queens of our Mardi Gras Carnivals.

"We want to know just what are the standards of the United States Senate. We hope to show Louisiana and America that men can not go to the Senate through fraud and corruption. The Senate has honor and integrity to protect. It is the only body of men in our country that has the power to unseat Federal judges, even the President of the United States.

"Once the object of our organization is accomplished—and we intend to stick at it until it is accomplished—we will dissolve as an organized body. However, I do not believe any of the women who have banded together for this purpose will ever go back to a State of being uninterested in politics; rather they will become increasingly active in all politicl matters."

'White Collars' Will Get Help From League

Trenton, N. J., May 4 ((U.P.)).—Formation of a National White Collar League to solve social and economic problems in cooperation with labor and agriculture was announced today by Arthur Richards, executive secretary.

Incorporators of the league, which will seek for the white-collar group a just and equitable treatment in relief funds and recovery measures, are J. D. Wilson of Atlanta, Ga.; A. William Morrison of Miami, Fla.; F. Woods Beckman of Altoona, Pa.; E. P. Goodrich of New York, and Richards.

The white-collar group comprises about 35 per cent of the country's population gainfully employed.

Two daughters of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Hill, 2335 California street, have been elected to office at Radcliffe College, Cambridge, Mass.

Miss Marianna Hill, a member of the junior class, will be the vice president of the Choral Society for the year 1934-35. Miss Margaret Hill, a sophomore, was elected secretary of the Idler Club, the college dramatic society. She was in charge of the play presented at the last meeting.

Designers Already Planning High Fashions for Autumn

AT A TIME when most American women are planning their summer wardrobes, the Paris designers are trotting out new fall models. This activity on the part of the dressmakers has all the advantages of gazing into the future. If leg-o-mutton sleeves are first sighted in April, the shock experienced at their triumphant return will be worn off considerably by September.

Come September, leg-o'-muttons will cover fashionable arms, says Maggy Rouff, a designer to be taken seriously. Not content with sticking huge sleeves into black velvet daytime coats and afternoon dresses, she has even attached them to evening growns.

Mainbocher has gone courtly and regal for fall. His evening gowns have capes dangling down the back. Sometimes they are three-quarter length. Often they are so long they resembled court trains.

In fact, all the Paris fall collections thus far lean strongly to dark colors. Dead black, deep brown, dark blue are favorities. Beige, greige, and fairly light greens are also good.

Paray is showing straight, slim coats with Persian lamb or beaver yokes giving bulk to the upper body. Fur hoods, revers, and draperies achieve the same effect. Caracul has been inserted in the jacket of a deep brown velvet suit in the manner of a corselet. Other Paray suits have fingertip jackets, slim, belted, fur-trimmed. This designer's little black frocks formed a highlight of her collection.

Rugs, Pottery, Tambourines, Other Interesting Things Procured Here.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

THE IDEA it takes a bull fight or a tango to give a proper representation of old Spain is disproved by senor proprietor of a local shop. With a wonderful stock of Spanish wines and ciders he achieves more effect than he would with a toreador.

When a customer enters the doorway she is first impressed with the orderly arrangement of stock, the polished bottles, the spic and spanness of the entire layout. When she begins to look around and notice details she is apt to conceive a thirst from the sight of so many tempting Spanish wines.

If these have no effect, surely the peppery viands that line the walls will. She may take her choice of canned chiles, tamales, pimento morrones, chorizos (sausage), olives stuffed with anchovies, and any number of other odd and interesting delicacies.

Besides these canned goods from across the sea, there is olive oil of the highest quality, Costa Rican coffee, South American tea, and all kinds of beans and tropical fruits.

The senor in charge also has a small but interesting collection of Spanish rugs, pottery and tambourines.

Eloquent Perfumes.

One Parisian perfumer is remarkably eloquent with his perfumes. He is saying it is season of flowers with a fragrance of the same name. A sniff conjures up such visions of roses, daffodils, lilies, lilac and violets as words and phrases could never achieve.

He describes the breeze of the Indies in a soft, haunting, subtle and sweet scent, Brise des Indes. He seems to say it gently caresses one's face, bringing the fragrance of fresh growing things and tropical flowers, as it sweeps slowly down a white beach and plays in the midst of palm trees and hibiscus blooms. And then disappears into a nowhere.

Praises of pewter have been sung, but praises for a certain inexpensive pewter pitcher are just now ringing out.

It has always been an attractive piece, but since its price has recently fallen (due to a sale) to 79 cents, it is causing a bit of a stir in shopping circles.

The book is on sale in a downstown store.

Seven shades of powder to match any skin tone is the offer of a well known cosmetician. Modern women have waked up to the fact "just any powder" won't do; that unless it is carefully selected, of a proper blend for their complexions, it is worse than no powder at all.

Her seven shades of powder have a soft quality that gives the skin a velvety look.

Deceptive qualities have been developed to a state of perfection in the new wax fruit on sale in a Connecticut avenue store. Unlike most deceptions this is to be condoned, not condemned.

Pot Cheese Possibilities Are Many and Varied

Some Like It Plain, but Most People Enjoy It More When Fancied Up a Bit as in Soup, Salad and Even in Ice Cream

By Ann Barrett.

YOUR REAL POT-CHEESE enthusiast likes his cheese straight, I find. It's that way with Eddie Cantor, who tells me he eats a dish of pot cheese (just seasoned with sour cream) every day. But for those who like their pot cheese disguised a bit, there are many exciting possibilities—in soups, salads, sandwiches and desserts.

Pot-Cheese Soup.

For pot-cheese soup, you want firm pot cheese—2 cups. Mash this up as smooth as you can with a fork, and set aside while you make this white sauce: Melt 3 tablespoons butter, blend in 2 tablespoons flour, slowly add 3 cups milk and stir constantly over low fire till thickened. Then add ½ teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon paprika and the pot cheese. Stir briskly while heating, and just before serving beat well with rotary beater. Sprinkle with 1 tablespoon each mixed chopped chive and chopped parsley.

Petter-Pot-Cheese Salad.

For a refreshing pepper and pot-cheese salad, you want first two nicely-shaped, crisp green peppers. Cut slice off stem end of these, scoop out all seeds and core, then rinse and dry thoroughly. Then mix 1 teaspoon unflavored gelatin with 2 tablespoons cream (in a cup) and set this in hot water till gelatin is melted. Next mix this smooth (with ¼ teaspoon salt) in 1 cup firm pot-cheese. Then stir in ¼ cup chopped olives; or drained, crushed pineapple; or sweet pickles; or nuts; or 2 tablespoons chopped pimento. Pack this mixture into the peppers, chill at least 2 hours, then slice and serve on crisp lettuce with mayonnaise or French dressing.

Pineapple Cheese Freeze.

First scald 1½ cups milk in top of double boiler, and add ½ cup sugar. Mix another ½ cup sugar with 3 egg-yolks, add to milk mixture and cook over hot (not boiling water, (stirring constantly till thick. Meanwhile, press ½ pound (about 1 cup) firm pot-cheese through fine sieve and mix it creamy with ¾ cup top-milk. Stir cooled custard into this. Then add 1 cup heavy cream (whipped only firm enough to hold shape). Pour into freezing tray of automatic refrigerator and freeze to mush (about 2 hours). Then stir and beat till smooth and fold in ¾ cup crushed pineapple (well-drained). Freeze till firm (about 2 hours more).

Persian Rice Wins Weekly Recipe Prize

Mrs. Irving Fisher Hale Submits It, Receives Five Dollars.

At this time of the year new dishes are needed to stimulate lagging appetites.

Persian rice, an authentic recipe from Persia, fills this need. Sent in by Mrs. Irving Fisher Hale, 2101 New Hampshire avenue northwest, it has won the $5 weekly prize.

The recipe follows:

Persian Rice.

2 cups uncooked rice.
2 tablespoons (or more, if desired) butter.
¼ pound seedless raisins.
3 or 4 onions (according to size).
Salt to taste.
Cinnamon for sprinkling.
Minced chicken, veal or lamb (meat optional).

Wash rice thoroughly, boil and drain. Slice 1 large onion and fry gently in the butter. When partially cooked, add the nuts and raisins and continue cooking until the raisins puff. Butter a large casserole and line bottom and sides with sliced raw onions. Spread one-half the cooked rice over bottom. Then add the fruit-nut-fried-onion mixture to the minced meat (if meat is used.)

Season layer with cinnamon and a little salt. Cover with remainder of rice and sprinkle top with cinnamon. Pierce mixture in three places and into each hole pour a tablespoon of boiling water. Cover dish and put into hot oven. After 5 minutes reduce the heat to moderate and bake slowly for 1 hour.

Serve hot as a vegetable. When serving bring up some of the bottom crust of onion with each portion. This recipe serves 10 people generously.

Swedish Architect To Receive Award

New York, May 4 (U.P.).—The highest award of the American Institute of Architects will go this year to Ragnar Ostberg, of Stockholm, Sweden, and will be presented by President Roosevelt during the Washington Conference of the Institute on May 17, it was announced today.

The Institute's gold medal award will add to a list of honors received by Ostberg in America and Europe, which includes a similar award in 1926 of the Royal Institute of British Architects and Yale University's Howland Memorial Prize in 1930.

Ostberg's masterpiece of architecture is said to be Stockholm town hall. The Swedish architect will reach New York this week, for the three-day convention beginning May 16.

I WAS A SPY! - - - By MARTHE McKENNA

What Has Gone Before.

Marthe Cnockaert McKenna, a Belgian, served as a British secret agent during the World War. She tells of the German invasion and the scattering of her family. She is attached as a nurse to a German military hospital and becomes a spy for the Allies. She causes the destruction of a German munitions train after reading a notation in the memorandum book of a German officer who flirts with her. Later she volunteers for service at a German advanced dressing station. Safety pins are worn as insignia by Belgian spies. Returning to the hospital she discovers that a German, masquerading as a Belgian spy, has been killed.

OF the normal weekly routine of transmitting unimportant information, the arrival and departure of troops, the destinations of German regiments, and the like, I shall make no mention, for it would become tedious and the reader may take it for granted. It is the more outstanding episodes of my life as a spy, which contributed toward the building of a girl's character into that of a woman and which have left their impress forever on my mind that concern me here.

In the middle of March, 1915, my father was offered the proprietorship of the Carillon Cafe by its owner who, with his family, was going to a town farther behind the lines. The cafe nestled in the shadow of the tall gray church of Roulers on the Grand Place, and this incidentally sheltered it to some extent from allied shell-fire. Wide steps led up from the Grand Place to a beautiful facade of old Flemish style, and through this one passed into a large room with a counter which was used as the cafe. The two upper stories at the back of the house had been struck by a bomb, and were nothing but bricks rubble, and splintered beams, but for all that, there was still ample accommodation.

My mother and I pondered for long over this offer. It certainly offered many advantages, being reasonably safe and having a spacious cellar, and the income would help the menage, for the war had sadly curtailed my father's assets. Men will talk and boast over strong liquor, and men are also apt to pay attentions to the proprietress' daughter. I realized that much useful information might be picked up in this way. But on the other hand the thought "Was it too obvious?" occurred to me, and in actual practice, should I be placing myself in a prominent and dangerous position? At that time there were many exaggerated stories current among the Germans in Belgium of the "cafe girls," and the way they had suffered for trying to make men talk, and although I feared that these tales might throw suspicion on me, I decided that the advantages would prove worth the risk.

Seeks Good Will of Germans.

As I should no longer have to come in contact merely with the hospital staff, with whom I was on the best of terms, but with all kinds of officers and men who would probably frequent the cafe, I decided that I must have a definite attitude toward all Germans. I frequently acted as spokesman and go-between for the townspeople in their dealings with the town-kommandant. I was, therefore, to some extent in the good books of the authorities, and without presuming upon this or overstepping the bounds, I must above all else keep this good will.

A too friendly attitude on the surface would almost certainly arouse the suspicions of the German secret service who were by no means fools, but at the same time I must contrive to be popular in a detached way and to gain the confidence of the men, so that I was the very last person in the world they would suspect. I bore myself, therefore, as an aloof, rather detached girl, who was quite honestly and openly in sympathy with the allies and the sorrows of downtrodden Belgium, but as one nevertheless who held no ill-feeling to individual fighting men if they behaved themselves. I made a point of bestowing my smiles upon regular clients, and I arranged for washing, mending and other small jobs to be done for them. "Never encourage anybody, never speak to anybody; just let them know that you are there and wait for them to make the overtures," was the essence of my policy. I was surprised how well and in what a short while this procedure began to show results.

From the first the cafe was well patronized, not only by the military, but also by the civilians. We kept one upstairs room, which overlooked the place as a private room to be used for dinner parties and special entertainments. When not in use for other purposes it was employed as a lounge for officers, and at nights this was almost always full of tobacco smoke and chatter. When I was home from the hospital in the evenings I waited on our clients with the two girls whom my mother had hired, either up or downstairs.

We had moved into the cafe at the beginning of March, and it was about one week later when I returned from the hospital earlier than usual that Bertha, one of our girls, approached with a very long face and told me there were three German officers not long arrived, who had announced their intention of billeting upon us. This was the last thing I had wanted, as I was afraid it might curtail my activities; but it could not be helped. The lounge had not yet filled up, and when the hand bell rang I went upstairs to ask for orders, anxious to see what sort of men were to live in the house with us.

Chats With Officers.

Three officers sat round the oak table in the center of the room gazing over empty wine glasses. They had flung their equipment in a pile on the floor. Two Hauptmanns leaned back with tunics undone, and puffed cigars. The other, a fair young lieutenant, very neat and tightly buttoned up, watched me, with elbows on table and chin on hands.

When I had brought the wine they ordered, the large, florid Hauptmann with red hair raised his glass.

"Fraulein, won't you do us the honor to drink a glass with us?" he started, rising to his feet. "Drink to our trip to Paris." He looked across at the others in a knowing way.

"Thank you, Herr; but I have had a very tiring day at the hospital, and there are times when I do not feel that I want a drink." I was, to say the least of it, intrigued with that queer look he had flashed to the other two officers when he mentioned the "trip to Paris." It was perhaps a merely fatuous remark; but that acute, inexplicable sense of being on the track of a secret was beginning to develop in me even in those early days.

"So you are from the hospital on the Menin road?" rumbled the red-haired man as though I had committed some crime.

"Yes, Herr."

"Really, Red Carl," said a cherubic young voice, "you haven't been sent here to court-martial this lady, you know." I noticed the speaker's wavy golden hair and his lively eyes. He certainly was an attractive boy.

The other Hauptmann, a long, cadaverous man of about middle age, with hair so closely cropped that his head appeared shaved, examined me through his large spectacles with a cold smile.

"Perhaps the Fraulein will be kind enough to show us where are our sleeping quarters," he suggested in a strangely quiet voice. There was something intense and queer about this man which made one feel he was very dangerous, although in what way he could make himself particularly dangerous I could not imagine.

Rooms Swapped.

They followed me silently. I was going to give the spectacled Hauptmann a room to himself as he was obviously the senior, and give our remaining room to be shared between the other two. But the spectacled one turned to me:

"Fraulein," he said, "I shall share with the Herr Hauptmann. We two have work that we must carry out together." His eyes glinted behind his glasses. "The Herr Lieutenant can take my room."

"Splendid," chuckled the lieutenant. "Red Carl, if you snore as thunderously tonight as you did with me in the train last night, I think at Hauptmann Reichmann's hands you will die a nasty, sticky death."

"Oh no—you wouldn't kill me, would you, you sinister old devil," grunted Red Carl, putting his arm good-humoredly about Reichmann's skinny neck. "I'm too damned valuable to you, eh?" I showed the two into their room and then went back to the lieutenant who had called to me.

"Queer couple, those two, aren't they, Fraulein? Possibly you think them a trifle rude and surly, but they don't mean to be. Just like brothers, and always wrapped up in their own ideas."

"Yes," I agreed. "What are they?" I had noticed that neither of the Hauptmanns were of the Army of Wurtemburg, and that they wore the badges of some special unit which I did not recognize.

"Just two representatives whom we have sent ahead to arrange our 'trip to Paris,'" he laughed. I knew it would be imprudent for me to say anything further, but there was some mystery here which needed probing.

In his room, the lieutenant, who told me that his name was Otto Von Promft, threw himself on to the bed, and lighted an expensive cigarette after offering me the case.

"You were a student, I see," I remarked.

Proud of Dueling Scar.

"So you noticed my dueling scar," he responded with pride. "I left Stuttgart six months ago."

Then he suddenly broke into fluent French. He told me he had lived in Paris most of his life until the war.

"I have been in various parts of Belgium," he told me during our conversation. "Everywhere it is the custom of you Belgians to bewail the terrible conditions under which you are forced to live, but I have recently returned from leave, and I daresay you will be surprised to hear that in our capital the regulations are just as great as those that you know in Belgium." He went on to paint a distressing picture with which I could sympathize, and was absolutely frank in all he said.

"However," he finished, "we Germans know how to put up with a lot, so it does not greatly matter. We are bound to win."

"You may win great victories, but I do not believe that in the end you will emerge from this war the victors," I observed.

"Fraulein, as yet Germany is not even tried. A victory, a sudden, overwhelming, crushing victory is coming, and it is coming soon." Some officers came up and rang the bell in the front room, so I told Otto I must go. Altogether we had been talking about half an hour. Those eyes of his somehow made you feel that he genuinely liked you.

Since the day I had worked in the advanced dressing station I had become very good friends with the two wounded British prisoners, the Highlander and the talkative one with the cigarette who had been in the dugout. They both belonged to Canadian units.

Jimmie was a common little man, originally emanating from a London slum. He possessed all the rough wit and good-humor of his class and was always cheerful. He made a joke when we had to put him on the operating table, and followed it with another one before he was violently sick when he woke up after we had done with him.

I eventually found that I was able to understand the Highlander's patois. He had been a miner in civil life, and was self-educated, with a serious argumentative outlook on life. He had taught himself quite a fair knowledge of French, and I used to lend him books in that language. One night he confessed to me in confidence:

Hopes to Be Clergyman.

"It has always bin ma weish, leddie, if a' could but acquirre the learrnin', to become a meenister." His meaning rather puzzled me at first, but when I understood, I could not help laughing at the thought of this gaunt giant ministering to his flock in a black suit. His name was Arthur.

One morning, as was not uncommon, I entered the ward to hear Jimmie and Arthur in fierce dispute.

"Have ye no bin to schule, mun—do ye know nothing?" expostulated Arthur mournfully at his grinning mate, who had just remarked something about a "Bleeding Liar."

"Arthur."

At my whisper he turned his head. I had slipped close to his bed. An eager look lighted his face. We had often talked together in the hospital grounds, while they were taking their daily airing, and I had hinted at assisting them to escape. On the pretext of tucking in his sheets I whispered rapidly: "Here are a thousand francs for you and Jimmie. When you are walking in the grounds this evening look out for a small Belgian with a squint near the civilian workers' annexe. Slip through the door. You will find clothes. Trust your guide, he will get you over the border."

Then I was gone, leaving Arthur gaping. Both of them were in the convalescent stage, their wounds having healed without trouble, and I could never understand why they had not already been evacuated. The thousand francs was all I could raise at the moment, but Pierre, the Belgian civilian, would also help. The rest of the day I was on tenter-hooks. Had I left a clue by which, should the lads be caught, I could be traced? I knew they would never betray me no matter what happened, but of Pierre I was not so certain.

Cunningly Caught.

By Katherine Smith.

Cunningly caught in snares of silver
Spun by the moon, I tug and strain,
Hoping the meshes will break and free me
Utterly; yet, I would still complain
If I should feel all the slender meshes
Loosening, almost resignedly;
I would want freedom if I were captive,
I would be captive if I were free.

New Blankets Make Pleasant Dreams

Dusty Pastels Used in Summer; Seem Cooler Than Dark Colors.

NEW YORK, May 4.—Pleasant dreams ought to be the lot of anyone who will elect to put this summer's blankets on the bed, whether that bed be situated in a mountain camp, a seashore cottage, a suburban house or a city apartment. For there are weights for all, which protect without burdening. And if color affects people's moods, as scientists say it does, these blankets will do their part in making both sleeping and waking cheerful.

Take a look at those blankets designed for camps and cottages. Warm, durable affairs, those. Ready for crisp mountain nights and change-of-the-tide winds.

New Colors.

Navy, wine, forest green, brown, plaids, stripes and border patterns the thing in color now.

Most popular of the regular house blankets for summer are those just like winter blankets, only lighter in weight.

You can carry out exactly the same color scheme you had in your winter blankets if that seems most satisfactory. Or change to the new dusty pastels which seem cooler and lighter than the richer winter shades.

Or if you want to get very gay, look at the new Scotch plaids which come in several clan combinations. One of these is illustrated.

A new blanket for summer use has a downy light, thin, suede-like texture and is finished with a narrow binding. This is particularly smart when a large monogram is appliqued in the center.

Still lighter than the regulation summer blankets are those slightly smaller ones of unusual textures or weaves finished with hand-knotted fringe or a thin bound edge known by the name of "throws."

Fine for City.

Originally these were intended to be thrown over an afternoon napper. But they've come to be used as a summer night blanket, too, especially in city apartments where only the lightest of covering is needed.

Many look hand-woven, hand-knitted or hand-crocheted. One of these last is sketched at the upper left . . . an openwork, meshy effect. And in the blanket at the bottom hand-looming has been imitated in colors which very closely approach the design and shading of a real old blanket.

(Copyright, 1934.)

Summer blankets of the types described are available in Washington in all the better blanket shops and department stores.

What Today Means

"Taurus."

If May 5 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:30 to 10:30 a. m., from 11:30 a. m. to 1:30 p. m., and from 6:30 to 8:30 p. m. The danger periods are from 7:30 to 9:30 a. m., from 2:30 to 4:30 p. m. and from 10:30 p. m. until 12:30 a. m.

In your social contact on this date you are very likely to encounter a very disagreeable type of individual, the sort that tries to impress you by recounting who was who in their own family history or the important people with whom they are supposedly on intimate terms. It is advisable to remember that people who are really to "the manner born" seldom feel it is necessary to regale comparative strangers with their family history or try to reflect glory by professing to know those who are in the public eye. Let what they have to say go in one ear and come out the other. Avoid, however, offending this person.

The woman born on May 5 has the happy faculty of being able to accept life as it is, always cheerfully and with an optimistic outlook. You are fortunately of the nature that does not permit little things to discourage or irritate your disposition. While you do not care to show off or attract an undue amount of attention, remember it does not pay to be of too retiring a nature. It might be advisable to display a little more animation when engaged in conversation.

The child born on May 5, as it grows up, will be inclined to be rather shy with strangers. It must be taught not to be self-conscious. This child should be encouraged to enter into the conversation of its elders, and must learn to overcome any feeling of timidity. No one should ever be allowed to openly criticize its conversational powers, or ridicule what it has to say.

The woman born on May 5 can make any man she marries an ideal wife. If born on this date, companionship is essential for your happiness. You are possessed with the mothering instinct, and children will always trust you implicitly. Never allow home duties to become chains of slavery by deliberately ignoring the claims of relatives and friends to some of your time. A wise woman will so arrange her time that a part is set aside for work, and a certain amount is devoted to social affairs.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. W. A. Evans.

Bone Changes in Adults.

A few days ago the writer followed a certain elderly man for a block, observing his gait and the effects thereon of a short leg. Many years ago this man broke his left leg above the knee. The femur healed with two or three inches of overlapping, resulting in one leg being inches shorter than the other. This man has never worn a shoe to lengthen his short leg. In walking, his body tilts to the left as his weight goes on the leg of that side. The tilt in his pelvic bones causes his backbone to bend unduly and throws greatly increased strain on the joints and ligaments between the pelvic and lower backbones. The man complains a lot of back pain, which he calls lumbago.

In addition to the side swaying and up and down movement, the man executes another curve toward the middle of the body of a kind that was not figured out. A short leg changes the mechanism of walking considerably and brings about an increase in strain. But this story has to do with another effect noted in this man. His right leg, the longer one, is bowing out at the knee. The man was full grown when he fell from the train and broke his leg, but, in spite of the maturity of his bones, walking for years on legs of unequal length has caused the long leg to bow in rather an unusual way and in rather an unusual location, for we must know that not all bow legs curve in the same location or in the same way.

By splinting the limbs of young animals and using pulling and pushing procedures he could shift the position of bones, turn them around, dislocate them, and bend them into different shapes. The bones under experimentation were healthy ones.

The possibilities of all kinds of deformities in rachitic bones can be easily understood. There is no wonder that children with bad rickets develop bow legs or knock-knees if they do much walking. The pull and drag of the chest muscles in breathing cause chicken breast and rosaried ribs. Some degree of curvature of the spine not infrequently results. The face may acquire peculiarities of shape, although that does not often happen.

Mr. Frohman Announces Notable Roster for Actors' Benefit—Was Hepburn Here?

Stellar Group To Take Part In Big Event

By Nelson B. Bell.

While last-minute additions to the roster of participants doubtless will be made—all precedent will be shattered if they are not—with the Actors' Fund Benefit, to be held Sunday night in the National Theater, only two days away, it is the due of prospective ticket purchasers to know what a pretentious program they may expect to see.

Daniel Froham, dean of the American theater and for more than 52 years active head of the Actors' Fund of America, has assembled a distinguished group of stars for Sunday night's gala performance. Elsie Ferguson, Otis Skinner, Frances Starr and Effie Shannon, representing the theater of an older day, will be among those grateful public once more will be glad to welcome to the local boards.

Eddie Dowling, author, comedian and producer, as the official master of ceremonies, will be assisted by Robert Emmett Keane—who served in the same capacity at the Inaugural Benefit a year ago—and Herbert Rawlinson, all veterans in that line of endeavor, as Washington can testify.

Experienced Ringmasters.

Mr. Keane, as stated, was Mr. Frohman's m. c. a year ago; Herbert Rawlinson served in that position at Loew's Palace Theater for many weeks, and Eddie Dowling was master of ceremonies at an N. V. A. night benefit at the old B. F. Keith Theater, when he discovered Kate Smith, and thereupon decided to make a place for her in his "Honeymoon Lane"—thus launching her on that magnificent adventure of trying to get the moon over the mountain.

These three, then, will introduce one of the greatest casts of stars ever assembled on one stage. Among these are Philip Merivale and Gladys Cooper, who will appear in the bedroom scene from "Cynara;" Robert Emmett Keane and Claire Whitney, who will do a comedy drama, called "Room 909," and Tony Wons, assisted by Peggy Keenan and Sandra Phillips in a scene from "The Merchant of Venice."

These skits, of course, do not take into account the contribution of Bill Robinson, the greatest tap dancer of them all; Fred Keating, the magician who went dramatic; George Hall and his Radio Orchestra; Tito Guizar, the romantic troubadour; Ken Murray and the entire Club Michel Revue, Meyer Davis' Orchestra, Gypsy Nina, famous radio personality; Phil Cook, the "man with a thousand voices;" Tommy Tucker and His Californians, from Wardman Park, or Fannie Ward, the perennial charmer, who never grows old.

Society Is Enlisted.

In addition to these noted professionals, a group of Washington society folk will be presented in a short play by John Kendrick Bangs, written especially for the Actors' Fund Benefit. Bert Bagranoff and Evelyn Tyner, vocalist and pianiste, respectively, will be additional Washington artists whose talents will add luster to an extraordinary occasion in the theater.

In addition to directing the entire project, Daniel Frohman will take an active part in the program. His appearance will probably be in conjunction with Elsie Ferguson's. Miss Ferguson, by the way, is remaining over in this country a full week after her intended departure for England in order to be present Sunday night and take part in the benefit.

Even if it were not a tremendous amusement bargain, the Actors' Fund Benefit deserves the wholehearted support of every right thinking lover of the theater as one of the country's most worthy charities, and one of the most economically and efficiently administered.

Tickets are on sale at the National boxoffice and room 537, Munsey Building. Hurry, before it is too late!

Great excitement and much scurrying around were occasioned late yesterday afternoon by a wire flash that Katharine Hepburn, who earlier in the week had negotiated a Mexican release "ex vinculo matrimoniae," was landing in the Capital at 4:45 o'clock by plane to spend the night, owing to the cancellation of flying schedules occasioned by the heavy weather and poor visibility.

None of the local officials connected with either the distribution or exhibition of RKO-Radio Pictures knew anything about it when called, and, it being our busiest day of the week, we had no time to institute a still hunt. Anyhow, it is by no means certain that Miss Hepburn, recalling the coaching of Jed Harris when she arrived in town to appear in "The Lake," might not have ducked out of the off-side of the ship and dashed away into the wilds of Virginia for solitude and asylum in the foothills of Four Mile Run, over across the Potomac.

At any rate, it was a very elegant rumor while it lasted—and may have had some foundation in fact, who knows?

What's in a Name?

Since "The Wind and the Rain," a new comedy to be seen for the first time in Washington at the Belasco Theater next week, beginning Monday night, derives its name directly from the Clown's song at the end of Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night," it is interesting to recall, as Mr. Vince McKnight has done, how many other modern titles of plays also may be traced back to the works of the bard.

Last year's Pulitzer Prize winning play, Maxwell Anderson's "Both Your Houses," of course, took its title from "Romeo and Juliet," the line being, "A plague o' both your houses."

"The Play's the Thing," a solid success of yesteryear, owed its title to "Hamlet," the full quotation being, "The play's the thing, wherein I'll catch the conscience of the King."

Hit in London and Gotham.

The title of "It's a Wise Child" is a reverse twist of the line from "The Merchant of Venice" to the effect that it is a wise father who knows his own child.

Philip Barry took his "Tomorrow and Tomorrow" from a famous speech in the tragedy of "Macbeth," which begins: "Tomorrow and tomorrow and tomorrow creeps in this petty pace from day to day to the last syllable of recorded time."

"The Wind and the Rain," in passing, has run for seven months in London, where it is still going strong, and four on Broadway, where it still is on view at the Ritz Theater.

A medical student who is also a composer of wide experience is author of the book, music and lyrics of "Take It Easy," the new musical comedy to be presented by the George Washington University Troubadours, May 9, 10 and 12, in Roosevelt High School auditorium. He is Edmund Ziman, who did the scores for several of John Howard Lawson's plays, for Eugene O'Neill's "S. S. Glencairn" and other Provincetown Players productions, and for John P. McEvoy's "Americana." After studying at Cornell for two years, he went to New York where he was associated with the Theater Guild. Besides writing the score for "The Pure in Heart," by Lawson, he also took a part in it, supporting June Walker and Osgood Perkins. It looks very much as if "Take It Easy" might bear the stamp of theatrical professionalism

Ellington Tunes.

It is significant of the musical stature of an old Washington boy that compositions by Duke Ellington, famous jazz band leader, pianist and composer, should have predominated in the recent concert given in Amsterdam, Holland—not avenue—by Melle Weersma, one of Holland's ace orchestra conductors, under the auspices of De Jazzwerald, a musical publication. Weersma is one of the best known jazz pianists in Europe and appears regularly at Tuschinski's cabaret, "La Gaite," in Amsterdam.

Ellington numbers played by Weersma included "Creole Love Call," "Rocking in Rhythm," "It Don't Mean a Thing," "Sophisticated Lady," "Echoes of the Jungle" and "Mood Indigo."

Some very nice numbers in that half dozen—especially "Sophisticated Lady" and "Mood Indigo," and especially the way Duke plays them.

Because this column is so continuously and so persistently bombarded with inquiries as to where amateur talent may find an outlet, it is pleasant to be able to announce that in the belief that Washington harbors all sorts of clever amateur entertainers, Mine Host Peter Borras of the Madrillon has hit upon the idea of giving these promising beginners a chance to show their stuff before an appreciative audience of initiates.

So, then, every Monday night at the Madrillion, beginning next Monday, May 7, will be a "New Talent Night". Amateur singers, dancers and musicians will be given an opportunity to appear in the supper-dance floorshow. There will be a prize of $10 for the performer best liked by the audience.

Only amateurs will be allowed to compete. They must be between the ages of 18 and 30. Aspirants should register with Miss Thompson, secretary, at the Madrillon, between 3 and 5 o'clock Monday afternoon.

Reciprocity Note.

Now, what theater will be the first to stage a public tryout for chefs, passing out platters of "arroz con pollo," or something, to the audience so they can decide the winner?

I'll volunteer as a judge for that one!

"UNCERTAIN LADY." Universal picturization of the play by Harry Segall, featuring Edward Everett Horton, Genevieve Tobin, with Renee Gadd and Paul Cavanaugh. Directed by Karl Freund. Reviewed Thursday afternoon by W. A. Whitney.

Not only was the lady uncertain as to whom she would prefer in exchange for her present husband, but so was the husband in his choice of a future wife. So also were the producers uncertain, whether to make the picturization of "The Behavior of Mrs. Crane" a solemn study of marriage vs. business, or whether to make it a marital comedy-drama.

Out of this welter of indecision, "Uncertain Lady" emerges as passable entertainment, with Edward Everett Horton as its principal claim to attention. Mr. Horton is quite his harassed self as the dutiful husband of Genevieve Tobin, who finds himself infatuated with Renee Gadd, a home-wrecker whose idea of love is "how much have you got and how much can I get?"

An Odd Stipulation.

Miss Tobin agrees to a separation—but on the unusual condition that she be furnished with a substitute husband. And then came the war, and candidates George Meeker, as the wall-eyed professor, more engrossed in his forthcoming lecture than the wiles of the charming ladies present; Paul Cavanaugh, a multimillionaire, and very desirable; Donald Reed a sleek foreigner, not particularly averse to money.

To tell how it works out would be to spoil much of the entertainment—but this much can be divulged: You'll be surprised, and probably disappointed!

"Good Time Henry" offers Henry Armetta, with Hale Hamilton and Elaine Baker, in a conventional, so to speak, marital farce that has its moments. An issue of "Strange As It Seems"—a picturization of John Hix's daily Washington Post feature—and the Universal News round out the program.

Things Look Dark for Stars Planning for Vacations; Charlie Ruggles, Jester, Victim of a Joke; Flippancies and Foibles of Filmdom.

By Grace Kingsley.

Hollywood, May 3.—Many stars of M.-G.-M. won't have vacations this summer, because they must work. Lupe Velez and Johnny Weissmuller were going to Hawaii, but both will work. Robert Montgomery, on his way to his Connecticut farm, was called back. Wallace Beery won't get that fishing trip to Jacksons Hole, Wyo., because of a couple of pictures coming up. Jeanette MacDonald wanted to go to Paris, but will play "Naughty Marietta" instead. Jimmy Durante is on his way back from New York to resume activities. Clark Gable was paged at Del Monte. Elizabeth Allan is called back from England to play in "David Copperfield." Ted Healy went only as far as Santa Monica, but won't have much time to fish or swim.

JEANETTE McDONALD.

Helen Hayes, as soon as she finishes in "Mary of Scotland" on the New York stage, will return to M.-G.-M. Norma Shearer is to begin "Marie Antoinette" almost at once.

William Powell is the only M.-G.-M. star who is getting a vacation. He is buying a boat and inviting Richard Barthelmess and his wife and Ronald Coleman to accompany him for a cruise in Mexican waters.

To Lowest Bidder.

Charlie Ruggles bought an eighty-dollar suit of clothes for $8 yesterday, got no bargain and didn't add an item to his wardrobe. Roscoe Karns put up a job on him.

A cleaner brought back several of Charlie's suits, freshly pressed, to the comedian's dressing room. Karns happened to be there and received them.

"Charlie," said Karns, when Ruggles came in, "an old pal of yours was just in, down on his luck. Wants to sell you one of his suits. I think it will fit you."

"How much?" asked Ruggles.

"Well, about eight bucks," said Karns.

"Here's eight," said Charlie. "And give the thing back to him. I don't like the color."

Cases Vanish As Richmond Sips First Wine

One Dealer Books Orders for 320 More Boxes Than He Has.

Richmond, May 4 (Spl.).—Richmond drank up its first legal wine today in less time than it takes to tell it, and distributors sold to retail licenses more cases than they stocked in preparation for the first orders through the alcoholic beverage control board.

One distributor stocked 400 cases on his initial order, but they went like the proverbial hot cakes, and he collected orders for 320 additional cases before the day was out.

Local wine distributors were much pleased with the initial demand and predicted that wine will become the popular beverage in Virginia.

The ABC board is not so optimistic. R. McC. Bullington, board member in charge of merchandising, is anxious to stimulate interest in lighter beverages, but is now afraid wine demand will fall off after the first rush by the cellar-stockers.

Answering claims that drinkers who want a "kick" will avoid wine drinking, the wine people suggest that these folks try consuming as much as a half bottle at luncheon.

"There is plenty of power in it," one of them reported today. "The so-called sweet wines have an alcoholic content of about 21 per cent, which makes them stronger than the average portion of whisky and soda. The dry wines run about 14 per cent."

'Good Times' Here, Train Police Active

Hagerstown, Md., May 4 (Spl.).—Another sign interpreted to mean that better times are returning was noted here yesterday when railroad police began a drive to round up train riders. Thirty were arrested, all of whom were given five-day jail sentences by magistrates.

In the past, as soon as times became better, train riding was discouraged by arrests.

Sun Bursts Out to End Rain at Shenandoah Apple Celebration.

By C. B. Carr,

Winchester, Va., May 4 (Spl.).—Pages of history telling of the settlement and development of the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia were turned backward here today in "The Trail of the Pink Petals," the grand feature parade of the Shenandoah Apple Blossom Festival which honored its queen, Mrs. John Hay Whitney, international sportswoman.

As 50,000 people cheered, the queen and her court of 29 princesses moved through the streets of this historic town on chariots of white escorted by Troop E, Third Cavalry, Fort Myer, Va. The chariot ob her majesty was drawn by four dapple gray imported Percheron horses from Mrs. Whitney's Llangollen Stables in Loudoun County.

The Overseas Drum and Bugle Corps, Veterans of Foreign Wars, of Washington, led the first division of the parade, in which the queen and her court rode. A half dozen other musical organizations marched with the royal division.

Rain Cuts Attendance.

Wearing the white robes in which she was crowned Queen Shenandoah XI yesterday, Mrs. Whitney bowed and smiled to her admiring "subjects" as the parade moved through lines hardly more than one-third as dense as those of 1933 because of the heavy rain yesterday and light rain this morning. Bright sunshine, however, cast its glow upon the royal entourage during the parade.

For two hours the procession went forward as the 88 participating units were reviewed by dignitaries of State, including Governor George C. Peery, of Virginia; Brig. Gen. S. Gardner Waller, commander of the Virginia National Guard, and Major J. Fulmer Bright, of Richmond. Dr. Lewis M. Allen, Winchester physician, was grand marshal of the parade, which was produced under the direction of Jack T. Engle, local business man.

Yesterday's rains resulted in cancellation of the entire daytime program except the coronation of Mrs. Whitney, which took place indoors. Today, however, 3,000 school children of Frederick County, attired in gay pink, green and white gowns, paraded in honor of the new queen of blossomland. Eleven hundred Winchester school children presented their pageant, "The Spirit of the Years," this morning, and Garland R. Quarles, Winchester school superintendent, who directed, stated that it would be repeated at 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon for visitors remaining here.

Historical Tableau Shown.

The pageant depicted the historical lore of the Shenandoah Valley. This afternoon a division of the grand feature parade carried this idea further by presenting in tableau form the first settlers of the valley, the arrival of Thomas Lord Fairfax, Colonel James Wood being "chaired" for George Washington, Daniel Morgan and his riflemen off for Quebec, and the meeting of Gen. Robert E. Lee and Stonewall Jackson.

The queen's ball was held this evening in Shenandoah Valley Academy gymnasium here. After attending it for a short while, Mrs. Whitney left for Martinsburg, W. Va., where she boarded a train for Churchill Downs, Ky., to attend the Kentucky Derby tomorrow. She was escorted to the Virginia-West Virginia line by Virginia motorcycle officers and was met there by similar West Virginia officers for escort to Martinsburg.

Local and State police reported that the festival was without mishap except that Hubert Copenhaver, 17, driver of a float in today's parade, was overcome by monoxide gas while being closely housed in a cab covered with heavy bunting. The parade was halted for about 15 minutes and Copenhaver was removed to a local hospital. His condition was not considered serious.

Prize Awards Announced.

Artistic floats—First, $100, Handley High School, Winchester, Va.; second, $50, Winchester Lions Club; third, cup, Banks of Winchester; fourth, cup, Winchester Lodge of Elks.

E. P. Johnson Wins Virginia Science Award

Honored for Research in Deadly Disease of Poultry.

Harrisonburg, Va., May 4 (Spl.). Dr. E. P. Johnson, research professor in the Department of Animal Pathology and Zoology at Virginia Polytechnic Institute, now working on leave with Dr. H. E. Jordan, of the Medical School of the University of Virginia, was awarded the annual research prize of the Virginia Academy of Science at the twelfth annual session tonight at Harrisonburg State Teachers' College.

Dr. Johnson has been carrying on a three-year experiment in leucosis (fowl paralysis), a deadly disease among poultry. He has determined that the disease, which takes a great toll among chickens every year, is attributable to a filterable virus. He has been able to reproduce the malady and now hopes to solve its cure.

Honorable mention went to Ladley Husted, Miller School of Biology and Blandy Experiment Station of the University of Virginia; Roland J. Main, of the Medical College of Virginia; and Edward G. Pickels, of the School of Physics of the University of Virginia.

Dogmas Assailed.

Dr. William A. Kepner, president of the Virginia Academy and University of Virginia biologist, said that the dogmas of science have "led us to unsatisfactory social conditions," in an address tonight.

The president's address dealt with "the peculiar fact that biology is generally recognized as the science of life, and yet biologists, since the days of the 'Cartesian revolution,' have not had the courage to recognize life. Of the phases of reality—matter and life—that remain man's outstanding mysteries, biologists prefer the former."

The speaker described the "Cartesian revolution" as being launched by Descartes, French mathematician, to rid science of the human element, leaving in it nothing but the most exact mathematical precision.

He asserted that "science is responsible for too much of everything, and everyone is in want. Bread, not personality, has been considered real by men."

More Than 400 Attend.

More than 400 scientists, teachers and students from a score of Virginia educational institutions attended the sessions today. The meetings will close at noon tomorrow with the annual business session, when Dr. W. T. Sanger, president of the Medical College of Virginia, will be installed as president and his successor as president-elect will be named.

Tonight's public session was featured by a demonstration of "cold light" by Dr. I. A. Updike and two student assistants from Randolph-Macon College. This light is generated by a chemical process taken from fireflies and other insects. It produces little heat, but does not have lasting qualities. This is the first time the demonstration, which was developed at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, has been given in this section of the country.

Centrifuge Exhibited.

Another interesting demonstration was that of the centrifuge developed by J. W. Beam, of the University of Virginia. It rotates at a speed sufficient to break the hardest of materials. It has many uses for physicists, chemists and medical workers. A time interval is short, as one one-hundred-millionth of a second can be measured by the instrument.

After the close of the sessions tomorrow, the annual foray of the botanical section of the academy will be made. It will start in the Briery Branch section of southwest Rockingham County and continue to Camp May Fletcher, the district of Columbia Girl Scouts resort, near Stokesville, where the week-end will be spent by the party of 40 or 50 scientists.

The foray is a part of the State botanical map survey being completed by the academy.

3 in Waynesboro, Pa., Seek Postmastership

Waynesboro, Pa., May 4 (Spl.).—A. R. Warner, acting postmaster of Waynesboro, today had the recommendation of the Democratic executive committee of Franklin County for the post. His name was sent to Representative Harry L. Haines of the Twenty-second District of Pennsylvania.

Two Charles C. Lee Poems To Be Revealed Tomorrow

Stratford, Va., May 4 (Spl.).—The Robert E. Lee Memorial Foundation will sponsor the fourth annual May celebration at Stratford Hall, Westmoreland County, birthplace of the famous Confederate leader, Sunday at 2 p. m.

Maj. Giles B. Cooke, chaplain general of the foundation and the last surviving member of Gen. Robert E. Lee's staff, will deliver the invocation and benediction. The first public presentation will be made of two original poems written more than a century ago by Charles Carter Lee, eldest son of Light Horse Harry and Ann Carter Lee. Picturesque aspects of the Lee home and interesting episodes in the youth of one of Washington's favorite generals will be recounted in a paper read by Miss Nora Lee Antrim, one of Light Horse Harry Lee's great-great-grandaughters.

Stratford's gardens have been completed and the north vista cut to the river. The white asbestos roof has been replaced by a new roof of old-style shingles. The octagon house, at the end of the garden wall, is completed, and lightning protection has been installed.

Gen. B. F. Cheatham, resident superintendent of Stratford, is supervising a revival of the ancient plantation industries. Widespread interest has attended the Lee Foundation's plan to restore an eighteenth century plantation of early colonial Virginia and at the same time give steady employment to a gradually increasing number of people.

Establishment of the sheep industry has followed revival of the pig industry started by Mrs. Orton Bishop Brown. Eight thoroughbred Hampshire ewes were given the Lee Foundation by Sam Rayburn, member of Congress from Texas.

Deal Out of Race For Byrd's Place

All "Serious Opposition" to Senator Gone.

Norfolk, Va., May 4 (Spl.).—Joseph T. Deal today declared he would not be a candidate for the United States Senate against Senator Harry Flood Byrd in the Democratic primary in August. With this announcement, all serious opposition to the reelection of Byrd appeared to have vanished.

It also appeared probable that none of the incumbents in the House, all Democrats, would have opposition for renomination.

There will be Republican candidates in the Second District to oppose Colgate W. Darden, incumbent Democrat. Geroudl Rumble, district chairman of the Republican party, is being groomed to oppose Darden.

Wiley Ford Residence Damaged by Flames

Strike-Breakers Move All Cargoes

Norfolk Agent Says Firm Has Surplus of Labor.

Norfolk, Va., May 4 (AP).—Cargo was being moved today with full crews of stevedores at all of the piers in Norfolk and Portsmouth, where nearly 500 Negro dock workers went on strike yesterday when the demands of the Marine Workers Industrial Union were ignored by the steamship and railroad lines.

"We have all the men we can use today and have had to turn away applicants," said A. E. Porter, general agent, Merchants & Miners, where 200 or more dock workers quit Wednesday night. The same report came from representatives of the Chesapeake Steamship, Old Bay Line, Philadelphia & Norfolk Line, on the Norfolk side, and from the Seaboard and Southern piers at Portsmouth and Pinners Point.

Fines of $2.50 each were imposed on 37 alleged strikers when they were tried today on charges of loitering.

Brown Bests Whitehill, Tribe Downing Nats in Series Opener, 5-3

Indians Score Three In 8th to Take Lead; Harris' Homer Futile

By Shirley L. Povich
(Sports Editor of The Post).

THE stumbling Nats tripped over the southpaw figure of Lloyd Brown and left their scalps with the Cleveland Indians yesterday at Griffith Stadium, where the ladies, 5,000 of 'em, saw the Washington club act very lady-like against the pitching of Brown.

Brown was a good guy when he had it, and he had it all afternoon, but the 5-3 triumph of the Indians was not established until along about the cocktail hour when the Washington pitching, namely Earl Whitehill, went sour in the eighth inning of what had been a ball game that was tighter than a dyspeptic comptroller general.

The Nats were enjoying the comforts of a 2-1 lead in that eighth and the ladies in the stands, who had been cheering pop-ups and three-base hits alike, were thinking of doing the dinner shopping in good time, when they were unavoidably detained by a sudden siege of activity by the Indians.

Score With Two Out.

Jahnny Vosmick chiseled a base on balls from Whitehill to start that eighth, but there was no cause for undue alarm when Trosky struck out and Hale flied out. But Whitehill put Moore on base with a walk that moved Vosmik up and found himself confronted with Bill Knickerbocker and his .412 batting average. Knickerbocker's figures weren't lying and he smacked a two-base hit into right center that scored both Vosmik and put the Indians in a 3-2 lead.

Sensing that three runs might not be enough to win, Lloyd Brown contributed a single past Cronin that scored Knickerbocker, and it was 4-2.

Harris Hits Homer.

Thus the Nats went into the ninth with a three-run deficit. They came out of it with a home run by Dave Harris and a 5-3 defeat. Harris socked his homer on a law trajectory into the left-field bleachers, but Cecil Travis, and Pinch-Hitters Bob Boken and Ed Klumpp succumbed in one-two-three order.

The Nats didn't have much business in the ball game in the first place, because Harris' homer was the only earned run off the former Washington southpaw, who landed with Cleveland via St. Louis and Boston.

Brown started the Injuns toward their victory when he led off the third inning with a single and a run ultimately scored on a single by Pytlak and a double by Averill, but the Nats bounced back with two runs in the fifth that were a pure gift from a couple of sources.

Opens With Single.

Travis opened the fifth with a single through the box and when Whitehill missed an attempted sacrifice bunt, Pytlak picked Travis off first as neatly as you could ask. Travis overslid the bag and lay there on the ground groping for safety, but missing by several inches, but Umpire Geisel saw nothing, neither did he hear the protests of Walter Johnson and the horde of Cleveland players. He called Travis safe and the ball game proceeded.

Then Whitehill bounced a grounder to Brown, who wheeled and threw to Knickerbocker at second for the start of a double play, but all hands were safe when Knickerbocker dropped the ball just like that. So, when Joe Kuhel walked, the bases were full with one out and Buddy Myer brought Travis home with the tying run on a single to right. Manush shoved a long fly into right and Whitehill scored from third with the run that put the Nats in the 2-to-1 lead that they couldn't hold.

The Nats outhit the Indians, 9 to 8, as far as that goes.

Umpire Is Injured; Players Lend Hand

Quigley, National Leaguer, Suffers Fractured Jaw.

Cincinnati, May 4 (AP).—Ernest Quigley, veteran National League umpire, was injured in the first inning of the Cincinnati-Brooklyn game today when a foul tip off Chick Hafey's bat struck the lower part of his mask and jammed it against his jaw. He did not discover the injury until he found he could not speak to call Hafey out after another strike. It was feared he had suffered a fractured jaw.

Quigley was forced to abandon his task of calling balls and strikes and was taken to the dressing room for treatment. After a consultation with the managers, the other umpire, Charley Moran, took Quigley's place and each team provided a man to umpire on the bases. The Reds nominated Pitcher Sylvester Johnson and the Dodgers Coach Otto Miller.

Pitt Defeats Roesch For Golf Title

Takes Washington Club Final, 3 and 2, Over Host Medalist.

A GOLFING "grand slam" for 1934 his aim, Harry G. Pitt, Manor's debonair of the links, yesterday won the Washington Golf and Country Club invitation tournament—his second invitation triumph in six days.

Last Sunday Pitt outlasted John Shorey, of Kenwood, to capture the Belle Haven crown, and late yesterday afternoon he ambled off the sixteenth green in characteristic Pitt fashion after defeating Frank Roesch, medalist from the host club, 3 and 2.

Pitt won the Washington tournament by dint of superior work with his woods, irons and putter. He seemed to be able to produce the perfect shot at the crucial moment, and played virtually flawless golf in winning both his semifinal and final matches.

Tigers Bow, 3-0, As Gomez and Ruth Star

Southpaw Grants 3 Hits, Babe Scores Twice, Hits Home Run.

NEW YORK, May 4 (AP).—Lanky Lefty Gomez and bulky Babe Ruth formed an unbeatable combination today as the Yankees trimmed the Detroit Tigers, 3 to 0, in their first meeting of the season.

Gomez let the Tigers down with three hits, a single by Mickey Cochrane in the first, one by Billy Rogell in the eighth and Hank Greenberg's double in the ninth. Ruth clouted Tommy Bridges for his fourth homer of the season in the opening inning and scored the second run on a walk, Lou Gehrig's single and two force-outs at second. Red Rolfe, playing his first game in ten days, scored the other run on a hit, two infield outs and Ben Chapman's single.

8,000 See Balios Beat Ilchester by a Nose in Thrilling Finish at Pimlico

Star Porter 3d, Length In Rear

Winner Returns $8.80; Silk Flag Fails After Early Speed.

Victaress Is Triumphant; Workman Rides Biff to Victory.

By Walter Haight
(Post Staff Correspondent).

PIMLICO RACE TRACK, May 4.—Unfortunately, I forgot to bring my Brownie No. 2 to the track today, and I am unable to give you a photograph of the finish of the Sagamore, today's feature race. It was a honey as far as finishes go—like a magazine artist's illustration of three noses stretched for the wire, with the future of the hero and heroine and the old man's mortgage depending on the outcome.

Sliding off to an angle toward the inside rail, the three horses pounded across the finish line. There were Balios, Ilchester and Star Porter, all out to the last notch, with Jockeys Kurtsinger, Jacobs and Litzenberger riding with every ounce of their energy. A nose and a half length, the chart-makers called it, but three noses wasn't far fro mright. A great finish of a great race, run over a drying track.

Thrilling Struggle.

Silk Flag and Star Poretr dominated the early running of the 6-furlong sprint, and when the former threw up the sponge entering the stretch it looked like Star Porter's race. However, Balios and Ilchester came up on the outside and the three hooked up in their do-or-die struggle at the quarter pole. From there in it was a thrilling struggle of horses and boys.

Balios was a lukewam second choice and paid $8.80.

Ideal racing weather brought a crowd of 8,000 proportions to the historic course.

Beau Govans Wins.

Two heads separated the first three in the opening sprint for juveniles and the winner turned up in Beau Govans. with Earl Porter in the saddle. Gunwale, a 23-1 shot was second, and Gay Blade third. Gunwale and Gay Blade fought a rather private battle for the lead but Beau Govans came with a rush on the outside to take the purse. The winner paid $5.40.

Jockey Kurtsinger staged a fast finish on Vicaress to win the second race, another juvenile dash. Scrambled Eggs, the favorite, was second after setting all the pace, and Golden Dream was next. Vicaress was never worse than third and dove past the leaders in the last sixteenth to pay a $29.90 mutuel.

Spinach Is Victor.

Old Spinach, which served a long apprenticeship on the flat, finally made good in the run and jump division when he defeated a band of timbertoppers in the third race. Spinach, which lost his rider the other day, had R. B. Young, an amateur jockey, in the saddle today, and the combination worked splendidly. Spinach took the lead soon after the start and was never threatened thereafter although he barely wobbled over the last fence. Five lengths behind came Matagain, a 29-1 shot, with Free Wheeler, the favorite, a well-beaten third. Spinach was the medium of an $11.70 pay-off.

Sonny Workman rode a winner in the fourth race, pounding Biff home to a neck decision over Nights End. which had a four-length margin over Last Signal, the latter a 184-1 proposition. Last Signal set most of the pace. Biff was a $15 mutuel.

BEAU GOVANS, forced to secure racing room on the outside to enter into a forward position, came willingly when straightened into the home stretch, and closing gamely, was up in the final strides. GUNWALE, hustled into a brief lead, stalled off stiff contention from GAY BLADE, and then continued stoutly. GAY BLADE, on inside while forcing the pace, held on courageously under strong urging. ORTHOPRISM saved ground during the stretch run, but could not gain on the leaders. SHAGGY ANN was crowded at the stretch turn, when inclined to bear out. BE THERE was unable to menace the leaders. TOMBAREL had a rough trip in the opening furlong. TOOLBOX lacked speed, and raced wide.

SCRAMBLED EGGS, hurried to the front at once, saved ground wherever possible, was placed to punishment, but could not withstand the winner. GOLDEN DREAM entered contention on the inside, made a determined effort at the final furlong, but weakened thereafter. FIRST NOTE came wide in the late stages. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SPINACH, $11.70, $7.60, $5.00; MATAGAIN, $22.40, $8.50; FREE WHEELER, $3.90.
SPINACH went into an easy lead after the fifth fence, galloped along and took his fences stoutly thereafter, then had something in reserve through the closing stages. MATAGAIN, reserved off the pace for the first mile, bettered his position gradually, but could not threaten the winner. FREE WHEELER worked his way up steadily but was held safe when the real test came. PHILLIDA was kept close up in the first flight, but weakened when put to a drive. LAVISBY was outrun. SHAFFELL was never dangerous. His rider finished without stirrup irons. SPRINGDALE ROSE began tiring after a mile. AS FAIR just galloped behind his field at a slow pace. FLYALONG lost rider at the third. SWAMP FOX fell at the fourth. BLUE ZIP made a bad landing at the tenth fence, recovered, then fell at the final jump.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BIFF, $15.20, $6.60, $6.10; NIGHTS END, $4.30, $4.00; LAST SIGNAL, $34.10.
BIFF, nicely handicapped, and going in his best form, took command entering the home stretch, and strongly handled thereafter, had enough left to stall off NIGHTS END. Latter, slower than usual to settle in his stride, circled his field and was wearing the winner down at every stride nearing the end. LAST SIGNAL raced DIXIE BEE into defeat, but began tiring during the last five-sixteenths. LUCK IN closed gamely from a slow beginning. PAR VALUE weakened steadily during the final furlong. NIGGERTOE went evenly. DIXIE BEE stopped. CHATTERDOO showed a dull effort.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BALIOS, $8.80, $3.80, $3.50; ILCHESTER, $2.60, $2.60; STAR PORTER, $2.60.
BALIOS, on the outside of the leaders in the early stages, moved up stoutly approaching the home stretch, and finishing stoutly thereafter, was up in the last strides. ILCHESTER, rated close to the leaders, assumed a brief lead in the closing furlong, and then fought it out stoutly. STAR PORTER forced a fast pace, saved much ground, and then held on stoutly. SLIPPER KING was forced to race on the outside for the entire trip. AGATHAW could not get to the leaders, after meeting with early interference. SILK FLAG began tiring after five furlongs. HASTIPAST raced stoutly in the early stages.

SIXTH RACE—One mile and seventy yards. Purse, $800; claiming. The Garrick. For 3-year-olds. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:39. Off at 4:42½. Winner, Mrs. E. J. Two-dollar mutuels paid—INFILEE, $29.90, $13.20, $7.50; NOURRICE, $8.70, $4.80; LAURETTA NASH, $3.20.
INFILEE, forced wide at the first turn, was kept on the outside to reach a forward position, came stoutly when straightened into the home stretch, and in a hard drive, was up in the last furlong, and just lasted long enough. NOURRICE, rated under steadying restraint while setting the pace, shook off BLACK SONG, and then came again after losing command. LAURETTA NASH, far out of contention early, closed with a rush in the last three furlongs. REPEAL went in his best form and took no excuses. BELL MAN raced strongly for the better part of the trip. DUNLEY had speed in spots. BLACK SONG was used up racing with the pace. MISS GLACE broke very slow, and was never able to enter contention.

PEACH BUD, slow to get into full stride, worked her way up on the outside to reach a forward position, came strongly for the final drive, and was up in the last 50 yards. PENCADER entered contention with a rush midway of the final turn, then held on stoutly for the final drive. HOBNAIL opened up a clear lead early, saved ground, and held on stoutly. AIRWAY came stoutly in the final test. POLITEN appeared to sulk after being in tight quarters going to the first turn, was strongly handled and punished, but would not extend himself. IN INDIA weakened when called on. PIPE had early speed. ROYAL CHARGE stopped.

OLD FIELD, rated in front and saving ground, continued strongly when put to a drive. SOEUR BLANCHE went well placed early, but could not threaten the leaders when put to a hard drive. ROLLICK raced gamely from the start. THERMOPTLAE showed a flash of speed when nearing the final turn. BRAD tired. COG AIR raced in dull fashion.

Robey's Review

Finance Economics Business

Criticism of Governmental Policies by C. of C. Speakers Reflects the Shortcomings of Their Appreciation of the Problem a Year Ago.

By Ralph West Robey.

By Ralph West Robey.

Criticism of the policies of the Government by the speakers at the annual convention of the Chamber of Commerce provides a significant commentary on the difficulties of overhauling an economic system. A year ago at the annual meeting the great plea of the business leaders in attendance was to be freed from the restrictions of the anti-trust laws. It was these statutes, we were told, that were responsible for destructive competition and a continuation of a vicious circle of deflation. If business leaders could cooperate, immediate improvement was certain.

Now, by and large, there was considerable basis for this plea. Our anti-trust laws had been devised to meet a situation that largely had disappeared. And while they may have been reasonably satisfactory during a period of extraordinarily rapid industrial development and wholesale exploitation of natural resources, they were ill suited to current conditions. In asking for modification of the laws, accordingly, business leaders were taking a sound course. It did not follow, however, that such changes would make our economic system a bed of roses.

Business Leaders Failed To See Complications.

At the time, nevertheless, this was overlooked. The business leaders were so intrigued with the destructive features of the anti-trust laws that they either were unable or unwilling to look beyond. They saw these changes only as an end in and of themselves—a change that would have no ramifications throughout the rest of the economic system or that might make the task of earning profits and protecting overheavy capital structures just as difficult as ever.

Only the most casual reflection was necessary, however, to see that there would be such ramifications. If the antitrust laws were relaxed other means must be devised to protect labor on the one side and consumers on the other side. It was not a problem of removing Governmental restrictions on business policies and practices, but of altering, and, let us, say, modernizing, such restrictions. When the Government offered business a certain freedom from the antitrust laws through the NRA, therefore, it required that it accept in return certain social obligations, such as minimum wages, maximum hours, elimination of sweat shops, &c.

Abstractly There Is Good Reason to Make the Change.

Theoretically a strong case can be made to the effect that this was a "fair trade." It was not the kind of a "trade," however, that should not have been undertaken by the Government until it, and business as well, had thought out just exactly what was to be done. Unfortunately this was not done. From the start it has been evident that the program was haphazard, that there was no underlying body of theory upon which decisions were based, that the whole effort was, if anything, even more planless than had been our earlier unplanned society.

The result has been, it seems to me, just about what should have been expected—a state of confusion, a situation where there is vigorous dissatisfaction among producers, laborers and consumers. Some people are happy, of course. They are the ones by and large that have been able by one means or another to twist the codes sufficiently in their favor to enable them to pull a profit out of the NRA potpourri.

The existence of these defenders of the policy, nevertheless, does not prove that the program has been a success. Rather, when combined with the large volume of dissatisfaction, it proves that the program is in need of extensive revision—that when one starts to overhaul the economic system his plan needs to be bottomed upon something more than mere ballyhoo and the law of averages.

Federals Lead Bond Prices to Higher Levels

All Categories Improve; Changes Narrow; Sales, $11,691,000.

New York, May 4 (A.P.).—Under the leadership of U. S. Government securities, all categories of listed bonds displayed a better tone today, although trading was quiet and price changes generally narrow.

Transfers totaled $11,671,000, par value, against $10,447,000 yesterday and the average for 60 domestic corporate issues recovered two-tenths of a point.

While the volume in the Federal section was only about $1,600,000, virtually the entire list reached new high territory for the past year or longer. Gains ranged from 1-32 to 5-32 of a point.

No Constructive News.

Aside from a substantial rally in commodities, there was no especially constructive news so far as the bond market was concerned. Automobile shipments for April were a little ahead of March, but some 92 per cent above the 1933 month. Car loadings for the previous week showed about a seasonal gain.

A number of foreign obligations came into favor for the first time in some months. The Chileans were exceptionally active at advances of 1 to 2 or more points, while similar gains were shown by loans of Argentina, France, Germany, Latauro Nitrate, Poland and Royal Dutch. Both the French government 7s and 7½s established new record highs, the former selling at 182 and the latter at 182⅛.

List of Gainers.

The utilities and industrials were in fair demand. Gainers of fractions to a point or more in these groups included loans of American and Foreign Power, American Water Works, American Telephone, American Writing Paper, Anglo-Chilean Nitrate, Paramount, Postal Telegraph, Sharon Steel Hoop, Studebaker, United Drug, U. S. Rubber, Walworth, Warner Bros., Federal Light, Goodrich, Goodyear, International Cement, International Telephone, and Milwaukee Electric.

Among the better rails were bonds of New Haven, Nickel Plate, Missouri Pacific, Southern, Frisco, Chicago & North Western, St. Paul, Canadian Pacific, and Alleghany Corporation.

Curb Exchange Prices Display Firmer Tone

Alcohols, Utilities Slightly Lower; Sales Drop to 148,000 Shares.

New York, May 4 (A.P.).—Trading was at slightly higher levels on the curb market although late selling unsettled the list somewhat at the close. Some of the alcohols and utilities finished fractionally lower.

Transfers, which dwindled to approximately 148,000 shares, were around the record low for the year. Sales yesterday approximated 177,000.

Dow Chemical was an outstanding feature, soaring 8¾ points to close at 92¾. Natomas Co., Sherwin-Williams and Parker Rust Proof got up a point or more. Gulf Oil and Aluminum Co. of America improved major fractions.

Electric Bond and Share, Standard Oil of Indiana, Lake Shore, and Swift and Co. were steady but Hiram Walker and American Gas and Electric yielded fractionally.

The Dollar Abroad

(Associated Press.)

Aside from some improvement in terms of the British pound sterling, international dollar rates were virtually static yesterday. Trading was exceptionally quiet.

The American unit closed unchanged in London at $5.12½ to the pound, but the latter was a little heavy in New York and finished there 1 cent lower at $5.11½. London reduced the gold price 2 pence, to 135 shillings 10 pence ($34.82) a fine ounce, and purchases of $1,347,875 of the metal were reported.

In Paris the dollar ended ¼ of a centime off at an equivalent of 6.628 cents to the franc. The French currency again finished unchanged in New York at 6.63 cents.

At the closing New York franc rate, the dollar held the same .05 of a cent premium as yesterday. A month ago the premium amounted to ½ cent.

Lumber Orders Fall In Week, Report Says

Output 22,777,000 Feet Shipments 206,933,000; Below 1933.

Lumber orders booked at the mills during the week ended April 28 were less than the preceding week and less than in March weeks, but greater than the first two weeks of April and than any week in the first two months of the year; production was less than during the two preceding weeks and than two in March, otherwise heaviest of the year, according to telegraphic reports to the National Lumber Manufacturers Association from regional associations covering the operations of 1,512 leading hardwood and softwood mills.

These mills reported production 206,136,000 feet; shipments, 195,239,000 feet; orders, 205,273,000 feet.

Revised figures from 1,555 mills for the week ended April 21 were production, 222,777,000 feet; shipments, 206,933,000 feet; orders, 216,719,000 feet.

Orders Above Production.

All softwood groups reported orders above production during the week ended April 28 except Western pine, California redwood and Northern hemlock, but total softwood orders were 2 per cent below production.

The hardwood groups, except Southern and Appalachian, reported orders less than output, total orders being 2 per cent below production.

For the first time this year orders were less than during the corresponding week of 1933, according to reports of identical mills. All regions reported decrease except California redwood and Northern hardwoods. The largest losses were in the South and in Northern softwoods. Total softwood orders were 10 per cent below those of corresponding week of last year; hardwood orders, 27 per cent below their 1933 record. Production was 43 per cent above that of last year's week; shipments were 3 per cent below. The loss in orders from last year is due partly to recovery, then partly to current decline.

Unfilled Orders Drop.

Unfilled orders dropped somewhat from the preceding week, being the equivalent of 26 days' average production of reporting mills, compared with 27 days a week ago and 20 days a year ago.

Forest products car loadings during the week ended April 21 were 23,885 cars, a decrease of 479 cars from the preceding week; 6,763 cars above the same week of 1933 and 4,079 cars above the week of 1932.

Lumber orders reported for the week ended April 28, 1934, by 996 softwood mills totaled 178,262,000 feet, or .2 per cent below the production of the same mills. Shipments as reported for the same week were 167,127,000 feet, or 6 per cent below production. Production was 178,592,000 feet.

Reports from 563 hardwood mills give new business as 27,011,000 feet, or 2 per cent below production. Shipments as reported for the same week were 28,112,000 feet, or 2 per cent above production. Production was 27,544,000 feet.

Goods Markets.

The Railroad Credit Corporation's report of the Interstate Commerce Commission shows that $14,038,634, or 19 per cent of the fund created by Pooling Emergency Freight revenues through March 31, 1933, had been repaid to the participating roads up to April 30. Seven distributions have been made since the corporation began to liquidate last June 1.

Stocks Crawl Up Two-Tenths In Light Sales

Rails, Steels and Motors Turn Steady; Trading, 875,990 Shares.

New York, May 4 (A.P.).—Several major commodities, including wheat and cotton, were stronger today, but stocks, after a promising forenoon, found it difficult to make progress. However, on balance the market finished higher, averaging two-tenths of a point above Thursday's close in a turnover of only 875,990 shares.

A few of the more prominent leaders softened during the afternoon and their weakness seemed to dampen sentiment.

American Telephone was sold for a 2-point net loss, making a new low for the current decline. Case struck an airpocket that dropped it 5 points. Allied Chemical and Du Pont were down about 1 each and Consolidated Gas sagged a major fraction.

Steady to Firm.

Rails, steels and motors were steady to firm and metals developed a degree or two of strength. Sugar shares improved. Chrysler jumped nearly 2 points early in the day, responding to the extra dividend and first-quarter earnings statement which had been announced after yesterday's close.

Its gain, however, was cut to a fraction. General Motors, U. S. Steel, Pennsylvania, Santa Fe, Anaconda, American Smelting, Cerro de Pasco and U. S. Smelting closed with moderate gains.

The rapid progress which the House has made with the market regulation bill and its willingness to go along with the text as approved in committee looks to many like an indicator of how the membership will finally vote on the whole measure. The Senate bill, which embodies no specified margin requirement, is regarded as more lenient, but how the upper chamber will regard its own committee's version has not yet been disclosed.

Weather and Trade.

Uncertainties of the weather seem to be having an effect on retail trade. This week's Dun & Bradstreet Business Review says wholesale buying has been reduced, one retardative factor being "the current weakness of prices which may force merchants to write off depreciation on present inventories, much of which was accumulated at prices higher than replacement costs now obtaining."

April output of motor cars, according to estimates presented to the industry's chamber of commerce, represent the largest total since August, 1929, being 92 per cent above last year and moderately better than March, 1934. However, the figure, 269,569 units, is under earlier forecasts, due presumably to labor difficulties and the higher prices.

The move for modification of certain features of the 1933 securities act, taking form in a proposed amendment to the Senate stock market bill, was interesting to Wall street, which has not been alone, of late, in feeling that a revival of the capital market would help along the cause of general recovery.

July Cotton Advances $1.50 Under Buying

May Closes at 11.03 as General Market Rises 29 to 33 Points.

New York, May 4 (AP). — Trade demand combined with covering and scattered buying found offerings comparatively light in the cotton market here today and prices rose sharply.

July climbed to 11.19, or more than $1.50 a bale, above yesterday's closing quotations and nearly $2.50 a bale above the low level of last Tuesday. That delivery closed at 11.18 with the general market finishing very steady at gains of 29 to 33 points.

Early offerings were light, and as prices worked upward without encountering any pronounced resistance, covering became more active, buying interest showing some tendency to broaden.

This was encouraged by the firm tone of the stock and grain markets, and trading, which was only in moderate volume during the forenoon, became more active toward the close.

The demand from abroad tapered off after the close of Liverpool, but reappeared in the late trading.

May deliveries sold up to 11.06 and December to 11.48, making net advances of 32 to 34 points, and closing quotations were only a shade under the best levels.

Reports that recent weather conditions had retarded germination in some parts of the Southwest came in for some attention, and there was some talk of a better tone in the cotton goods market.

Exports today, 836, making 6,654,392 so far this season. Port receipts, 6,077. U. S. port stocks, 2,943,228.

Though somewhat irregular, bleachable cottonseed oil was generally higher today on covering and a little commission house buying prompted by the firmness of cotton, the advance in grains and steadiness of lard, hogs and crude oil. # Wool Trade Is Dull With Lower Prices

Boston, May 4 (AP).—The Commercial Bulletin will say:

"The wool trade has passed another extremely dull week. Sales for the entire country during April totaled little over 2,000,000 pounds, or about 7 per cent of a normal monthly average. Prices are extremely difficult to quote and are maintained at a purely nominal basis so far as territory descriptions are concerned. Bright fleece wools are relatively lower than territory types.

"Advices from the piece goods markets offer little in the way of encouragement. Only minor shipments are reported against old contracts in tops, yarns or goods.

"In the West, semioccasional sales are reported, with buyers withdrawn in most sections or else making offers under what growers are willing to accept. Fine wools, according to the wool and the locality, are being bought in the territory States at 70 to 78 cents, clean landed Boston for the most part. Occasionally one hears of a slightly higher price.

"London opened a bit better than expected in the matter of price and transatlantic markets are steady, although not very active.

"Mohair continues slow and hardly changed in price."

The bulletin will publish the following quotations:

Ohio and Pennsylvania fleeces: Delaine unwashed, 32 to 34; ½ blood combing, 31 to 32; ⅜ blood combing, 34 to 35; ¼ blood combing, 33 to 34.

Michigan and New York fleeces: Delaine unwashed, 30 to 32; ½ blood combing, 31 to 32; ⅜ blood combing, 34 to 35; ¼ blood blood combing, 33 to 34.

Wisconsin, Missouri and average Indiana and New England ½ blood combing, 29 to 30; ⅜ blood combing, 33 to 34; ¼ blood combing, 32 to 33.

Collections Retain Recent Advances

New York, May 3.—For the third consecutive month nationwide sales conditions and collections in wholesale lines held their own, according to a survey announced by the National Association of Credit Men. The study covers 100 major markets in every State.

Based on reports from the association's branch offices in these cities throughout the country the survey is a compilation of the experiences of the 20,000 member firms which are engaged in manufacturing, wholesaling and banking lines of industry.

Sixteen cities report "good" collections and 22 "good" sales. Thirteen of the 38 cities achieved the best record by reporting both sales and collections as "good."

The Federal Diary

By Morgan Baker
(Trade-mark Applied For)

(Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.)

While pictures were being gathered of prominent Oregon people, New Hampshire has been put into the Beaver State's place in the Federal Diary Parade of the States and will appear Sunday. Oregon Day will be announced later. Kansas will pass in review Tuesday and Georgia on Thursday.

THE French in 1743 were the first Europeans to set foot on Wyoming soil. The Lewis and Clark expedition did not touch Wyoming, but a discharged member of the party, John Colter, discovered the Yellowstone country in 1807.

BAKER.

Fort Laramie, a fur-trading post, established in 1834, was the first permanent settlement. Other forts were established to protect the immigrants en route to the Pacific Coast, but few of the posts survived beyond their military usefulness.

In Wyoming, as elsewhere in the West, the trapper was followed by a wave of gold-seekers. The precious metal was discovered on the Sweetwater River in 1867. After years of serious wars with the Blackfeet Indians and bands of white desperadoes the law-abiding citizens of Wyoming entered an era of peace and progress.

The name, Wyoming, is said to be from the Delaware Indian "M'cheuwomick," meaning "upon the great plain," the present spelling and pronunciation having developed through various stages of corruption.

Wyoming was organized as a Territory in 1868 and was admitted to the Union in 1890. It is the eighth in size (97,914 square miles); the forty-seventh in population (225,565 in 1930), and the forty-fourth in order of admission.

The motto of Wyoming is "Equal Rights." The State flower is the gorgeous orange and scarlet Indian paint brush.

Vast Mineral Resources.

Wyoming has the greatest undeveloped mineral resources of any State in the Union. It ranks first in coal reserves, and high above the other States in average yield in its agricultural crops. The average yield of potatoes in the United States is 100 bushels per acre, while in Wyoming the yield is 150 bushels per acre.

Wyoming produces potatoes free from disease, due to virgin and dry land. The sugar beet industry is a most important factor in Wyoming's economic life. There are sugar beet factories at Torrington, Wheatland, Lovell., Worland and Sheridan. The average sugar beet yield per acre is 13.5 tons. Alfalfa hay is one of the principal crops due to the large stock-raising activities.

The highways of Wyoming are practically all of the highest grade. Those from Cheyenne to Yellowstone Park are all high grade hard surface and mostly treated with oil.

There are many outstanding points of interest in Wyoming. Yellowstone National Park and the Grand Teton National Park are in the northwestern part of the State.

Many historical trails pass over and into the State such as De La Verendrye, 1743; John Colter, 1807; Wilson Price Hunt, 1811; Capt. B. L. F. Bonneville, 1832; Lieut. J. C. Fremont, 1842-43; the Oregon Trail, 1843-45, and the Mormon Trail, 1847.

NELLIE TAYLOE ROSS.

ONE of America's foremost women in politics is Mrs. Nellie Tayloe Ross, Director of the Mint. She was married to William B. Ross, who was Governor in 1923-24. Indian Battles.

Many famous Indian battles were fought in Wyoming such as the those of Dull Knife, Wagon Box, Grattan, Deer Creek, Fetterman, Caspar, and Tongue River.

The Devil's Tower is in the northeastern part of the State and Hell's Half Acre is near Casper in the central part. The Rocky Mountains cover most of the western part, while the eastern section is covered by the Black Hills which extend into the Dakotas. The State is full of historical shrines and beauty spots; there are many canyons, glaciers, lakes, hot springs and parks.

The principal dude ranches of America are in Jackson's Hole, around Cody, Sheridan and Buffalo. Easterners spend the summer on these ranches dressed as cowboys and cowgirls, hunting, fishing and riding. Game is plentiful, such as moose, elk, deer, antelope, bear and all kinds of fowl. Streams and rivers abound with trout. Fish hatcheries keep the lakes and streams supplied at all times.

The State University at Laramie ranks with America's best and the public schools are the latest in construction and equipment. The schools are aided through royalties from oil lands. Natrona County, as well as many other counties, has unlimited oil resources. Geologists state that Wyoming has not been scratched in its oil, gas and minerals, although millions of dollars have been realized in these resources.

Lawyer Given 10-Year Term For Swindles

Pleads Guilty in Court at Annapolis to Forgery and Embezzlement.

Annapolis, Md., May 4 (Spl.). Withdrawing previous pleas of not guilty, Charles W. Mulligan, Annapolis lawyer, formerly of Baltimore, today pleaded guilty to four indictments for forgery, one of embezzlement and one of false pretenses when trial was about to proceed in Anne Arundel County Circuit Court.

Judge Nicholas H. Green imposed concurrent sentences aggregating ten years in the State Penitentiary. Mulligan drew the longest term on the embezzlement charge, five years.

Mulligan formerly was attorney for the county board of election supervisors, and also served several years as police justice of the Third District. He was indicted on eight counts. The other two, one embezzlement and the other false pretenses, were settled by States Attorney A. Theodore Brady, following Mulligan's admission of guilt. The charges ranged from forging names to checks, mortgages and promissory notes to obtaining $500 from the State Capital Bank through false representations.

In asking mercy, attorneys for Mulligan said restitution has been made or arranged for in all cases. Judge Green gave Mulligan until May 10 to adjust his personal affairs.

Strange as It Seems —By John Hix

Harry Greb, the only man who ever defeated Gene Tunney in the fight ring, was distinctly a fistic phenomenon. He paid little heed to training rules, in fact seldom went into what most fighters would call a training period before a bout. When he appeared in the ring he fought with a style that was strangely unorthodox and, to his opponents, often too puzzling to combat.

Greb won the middleweight title from Johnny Wilson in 1923 in a 15-round bout in New York. His style, as always, was that of unceasing motion—a style that won for him the name of "the human windmill." Few fight fans expected that he could keep up the pace he set for himself, training on night life—but he kept it up year after year until at the end of his career he had about 500 fights to his credit and in only half a dozen was he defeated. He was knocked out only once, that was 10 years before he won the title from Wilson. Greb finally met Tiger Flowers, who won two decisions over him in 1926.

Strange as it seems, during all of the more important part of his career Greb had but one good eye. He lost sight completely in the other before he won the title. This handicap was unknown to his opponents, and only since his death has it became known.

Walt Mason, Himself

Fasting.

It's sometimes wise to shun the pies, the roast and Irish stew, the sirloin steak and angel cake, and fast a week or two. Our works grow tired, they are required to toil so long and hard, digesting jam and chunks of ham and doughnuts cooked in lard. We load them down with spuds done brown, spaghetti by the pound, and lima beans and mustard greens, and bread in gravy drowned. We eat with zest till from our vest the broken buttons fly, and then we know such brands of woe as make one wish to die. Spasmodic jerks afflict our works, and we in anguish say, "Call all the docs within ten blocks, and speed them on their way." The wires then hum, the doctors come, with healing in their wings; they feed us pills, rhubarb and squills, and many beastly things. And druggists come to earn a sum sufficient for their needs, and nurses squat around the cot to help with kindly deeds. They leave us broke, these helpful folk, they put us in the hole; perhaps they save us from the grave, but they destroy our roll. We'd save expense if we had sense to quit the eating game, to do without the wholesome kraut with which man stuffs his frame.

THE BUNGLE FAMILY — A Clew — By Harry J. Tuthill

FINE STUFF! JUST AS WE'RE READY TO CONCENTRATE ON LOCATING A CASH-CUSTOMER'S FAMILY TREE WE WALK INTO OUR OFFICE AND FIND THAT SOME BURGLAR SPENDS MORE TIME HERE THAN WE DO.
GEORGE, LOOK AT THIS PIECE OF PAPER I FOUND IN FRONT OF THAT LOCKED SAFE. READ IT. LOOK!
RIGHT 2 CHLORINE, LEFT 4 BISMUTH, RIGHT 2 IODINE. IT SOUNDS LIKE A RECIPE FOR HIVES, OR SOMETHING LIKE THAT.
WE SHOULDN'T HAVE HANDLED THAT PAPER UNTIL AFTER I TESTED IT FOR FINGER-PRINTS... IF I KNEW WHERE MY WIFE FLUNG MY NICE FINGER-PRINT OUTFIT.
THE COMBINATION? WELL HERMAN, I'VE READ A LOT OF DETECTIVE STORIES BUT THIS IS THE FIRST TIME I EVER HEARD OF OPENING A SAFE WITH DRUGS. AND...
PLEASE GEORGE, SILENCE... WHILE I CONCENTRATE. OH HOW I WISH WE WEREN'T UP TO OUR NECKS IN THAT OTHER CASE!
